Abstract	The increase of refugee status claiming immigrants in Canada has led to a review of the immigration policy concerning this group. This report looks at the weaknesses of current legislation which is linked to the Geneva Convention and its Protocol, studying Canada's past adherence to the rights afforded under its protection. Also discusses public and government opinion on support for a humanitarian and generous refugee policy and questions of balancing efficiency with procedural fairness to claimants. Gives a chronology of events since 1969.

Résumé	Le processus de reconnaissance du statut de réfugié au sens de la Convention de Genève, tel qu'il est énoncé dans la Loi sur l'immigration, sert à déterminer si les personnes qui revendiquent ce statut y ont effectivement droit et peuvent bénéficier de la protection accordée aux réfugiés au sens de la Convention. Ce processus s'est avéré inadéquat, tant au point de vue juridique que pratique. Dans ce bulletin, on examine les mécanismes en vigueur actuellement et le projet de réforme contenu dans la loi C-55 déposé en mai 1987.

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Canadian Research Index puts all of Canada's hard-to-find government and research literature at your fingertips. This monthly indexing, abstracting and document delivery service covers all levels of government in Canada, as well as institutions receiving research grants. Most titles included in Microlog are available in either paper or microfiche format. Combined with a microfiche collection, the Microlog Service is a powerful tool for finding Canadian report publications. The unique Microlog Accession Number is the key to immediate retrieval of any document.

SCOPE

Among other documents, Microlog includes research papers in physical, natural and social sciences, policy papers, important statistics, and annual reports. Every effort is made to ensure the currency of the index. For instance, documents appearing in the Checklist of Canadian Government Publications are delivered by Microlog approximately two months after publication of the list.

LANGUAGE POLICY

Documents issued in English or French are indexed and abstracted in the language of publication, while bilingual documents are indexed and abstracted in both languages.

SOURCES AND COVERAGE

Federal Documents: The Microlog editors review all checklists issued by the Canadian Government Publishing Centre and order every document relevant to the service. Except for serials, maps, pamphlets, and manuals, all monographs covered by the Federal Depository Plan are included in the index. Also, a special effort is made to track down elusive but important titles which do not appear in the lists.

Microlog offers a special collection of documents published by the Federal Government but not issued through the Federal Depository Plan. These titles, available to subscribers as the Non-Depository Publications collection, are indicated in the Titles section by a bullet (•). Microlog is also the direct distributing agent for many government bodies.

Provincial Documents: Depository arrangements with several provincial libraries have been established to ensure that Microlog subscribers receive all publications from those provinces. Where no depository arrangement exists, all publications lists issued by the province are reviewed for acquisitions.

Municipal Documents: Since these titles are very difficult to obtain, the Microlog editors make special efforts to include publications from municipal sources.

ACCESS

The Index provides access by subject, corporate or individual author, and series title.

The full Microlog file from 1979 to date, consisting of almost 50,000 records, is available online through Can/OLE. This is an ideal way to locate hard-to-find reports which may then be ordered directly online through the Can/DOCS service. Contact: Can/OLE Client Services, CISTI, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0S2.

FEATURES

Microlog comprises the following sections:

1. Titles and abstracts: A full bibliographic citation and a descriptive abstract for each title.
2. Name Index: Access by personal author, corporate author, and conference name.
3. Series Titles: Lists by title and number all reports in series in the service; series are available as an ongoing subscription or retrospective collection.
4. Subject Index: Descriptors based on Library of Congress and Canadiana Subject Headings are assigned to each document. A cross-referencing structure assists searchers.
5. Microfiche collections: Lists contents of each fiche collection for quick reference. These collections can be used as current awareness lists in broad subject areas to notify users of new acquisitions. This section is included in the annual cumulation as a separate fiched product.

MICROLOG AND CANADIAN STATISTICS INDEX

Statistical Material: The Canadian Statistics Index (CSI) provides further access to statistical material contained in Microlog monographs and special or annual reports. The CSI identification number has been included with the Microlog citation for the convenience of subscribers to the CSI fiche collection.

Annual Reports: Storage of annual reports in a single sequence has been a problem for clients in the past. The CSI numbers for annual reports are now listed in the bibliographic citation and appear on the microfiche header of each report, to make such sequencing possible.

DOCUMENT DELIVERY

Institutions may subscribe to complete or partial collections of the documents in Microlog. Individual copies on microfiche or paper reprint may be ordered through Micromedia's Document Delivery Service. To order, please contact:

INTRODUCTION

Microlog: Index de recherche du Canada met à votre disposition toutes les publications du gouvernement et les travaux de recherche difficiles à se procurer. Combiné aux collections sur microfiches, le service Microlog constitue un outil très efficace pour retrouver les publications des différents gouvernements du Canada, ainsi que celles des organismes qui reçoivent des subventions pour la recherche. Microlog est aussi un service de livraison de documents, sur microfiches ou sous forme imprimée.

CONTENU

Microlog contient entre autres des recherches en sciences physiques, naturelles et sociales, des énoncés de politique, des statistiques et des rapports annuels. Par l'intermédiaire du service Microlog, on peut obtenir les documents qui figurent sur la Liste des publications du gouvernement du Canada environ deux mois après leur parution sur cette liste.

POLITIQUE LINGUISTIQUE

Les ouvrages publiés en français ou en anglais sont indexés et résumés dans la langue de publication; les ouvrages bilingues sont traités dans les deux langues.

SOURCES

Publications fédérales: Les rédacteurs de Microlog examinent les listes émises par le Centre d'édition du gouvernement du Canada et commandent les documents pertinents. En dehors des publications en série, cartes, brochures et manuels, toutes les monographies régies par le Programme de dépôt du gouvernement fédéral figurent dans l'index, ainsi que des ouvrages importants ne figurant pas sur les listes.

Microlog propose aussi une collection spéciale de publications fédérales non déposées, identifiées par un point (●) dans la section Titres et résumés. Microlog est aussi l'agent de diffusion de nombreux organismes gouvernementaux.

Publications provinciales: Des ententes de dépôt ont été conclues avec plusieurs bibliothèques provinciales pour que les abonnés de Microlog reçoivent toutes les publications de ces provinces. Lorsqu'aucune entente n'existe, les listes de publications émises par les provinces sont examinées afin d'acquérir les documents.

Publications municipales: Ces ouvrages étant difficiles à se procurer, les rédacteurs de Microlog redoublent d'ardeur pour les inclure dans l'index.

ACCÈS

L'index imprimé est bilingue et les publications sont répertoriées par sujet, par auteur (collectivité et personne physique) et par titre de collection.

Le fichier complet de Microlog, de 1979 à aujourd'hui, contient près de 50,000 notices et est accessible sur

Can/OLE. Il s'agit d'un moyen idéal pour mettre la main sur des rapports difficiles à trouver qu'on peut commander par l'intermédiaire du service Can/DOCS. À ce propos, veuillez vous adresser au Service à la clientèle Can/OLE, ICIST, Ottawa (Ontario), K1A 0S2.

ORGANISATION DE L'INDEX

Microlog est divisé en cinq sections:

1. Titres et résumés: tous les titres sont catalogués et accompagnés d'un résumé descriptif.

2. Index des noms: donne un accès par auteur, collectivité-auteur et titre de conférence.

3. Titres de collections: tous les rapports publiés en série sont classés par titre et numéro. Ces collections peuvent être commandées individuellement.

4. Index des matières: les descripteurs permettent de trouver facilement les publications pertinentes; un réseau de renvois facilite la recherche.

5. Collections de microfiches: chaque collection apparaît dans une section séparée pour faciliter la recherche. Ces listes peuvent aussi servir à renseigner les usagers sur les nouveautés. Dans la refonte, cette section est insérée sous forme de microfiches.

MICROLOG ET L'INDEX DES STATISTIQUES DU CANADA

Données statistiques: L'Index des statistiques du Canada (CSI) constitue une autre source de référence sur les statistiques contenues dans certaines publications indexées dans Microlog. Celles-ci ont un numéro d'ordre spécial qui est inclus dans la référence bibliographique.

Rapports annuels: Afin de rendre le classement des rapports annuels plus facile, le numéro d'ordre CSI correspondant à ces documents figure maintenant dans les références bibliographiques et est inscrit sur les en-têtes de microfiches.

LIVRAISON DE DOCUMENTS

On peut s'abonner à l'ensemble ou à certaines des collections de documents de Microlog. On peut également commander des reproductions de documents sur microfiches ou sur papier par l'intermédiaire du service de livraison de documents de Micromedia. Pour commander, communiquer avec:

Sample CRI Search

"How can a person from a foreign country qualify for refugee status in Canada?"

The researcher can search in CRI as in any library catalogue - by subject, author and title.
Because the index is bilingual, searching can be done in English or in French.

Recherche type avec IRC

"Comment une personne d'un pays étranger peut-elle demander le statut de réfugié au Canada?"

La méthode de recherche dans IRC est la même que dans une bibliothèque, puisque les documents sont indexés par auteur, par sujet et par titre. L'index étant bilingue, la consultation peut se faire en français ou en anglais.

STEP 2/DEUXIÈME ÉTAPE

A unified search strategy

The search strategy should include all the monthly issues. Start with the most recent issue and work back. Monthly issues are cumulated annually.

Établir une stratégie de recherche unifiée

La stratégie de recherche doit tenir compte de toutes les publications mensuelles, à commencer par les plus récentes. Chaque année, ces publications font l'objet d'une refonte.

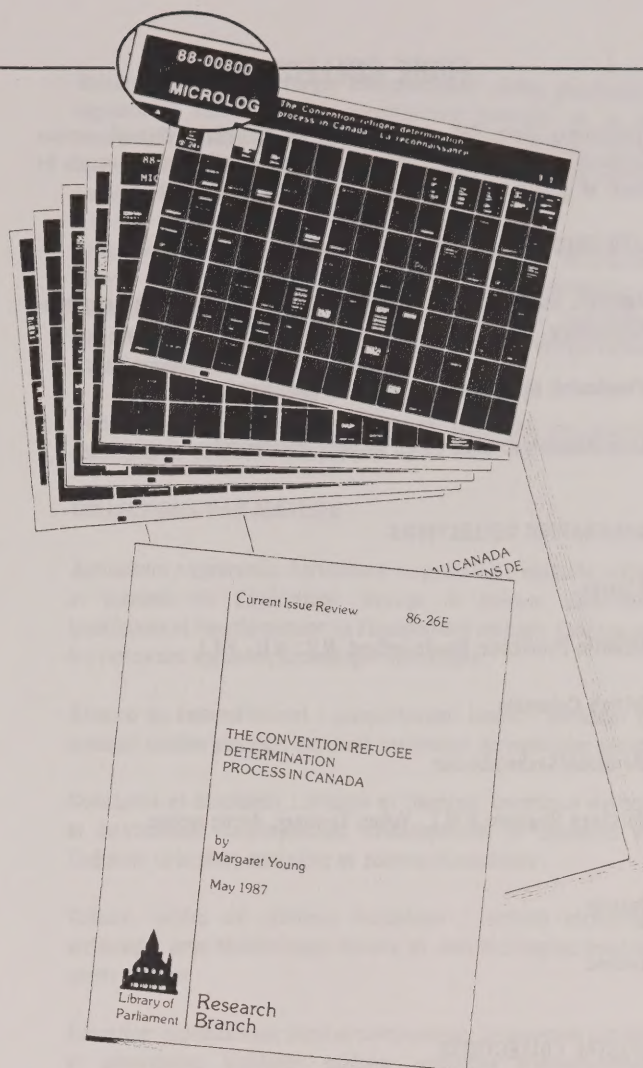

STEP 3/TROISIÈME ÉTAPE

Retrieve the publication

Each bibliographic citation gives a full description of the relevant document. Locate the document by the microfiche number in the library's collection or order from Micromedia. Individual publications are available for purchase on microfiche or paper. The bibliographic description provides publisher source information.

Repérer la publication

Chaque notice bibliographique comprend une description complète du document; celui-ci peut être repéré grâce au numéro de microfiche de la bibliothèque; sinon, il faut le commander à Micromedia. On peut se procurer les monographies sur microfiches ou sur papier. La description bibliographique comporte également des indications sur l'éditeur.

Mettre un projet en marché exige un énorme investissement de temps et d'argent. Le processus de commercialisation doit absolument reposer sur un bon plan stratégique. Cela dit, avant même de songer à la commercialisation, il faudra déterminer si votre projet est réalisable. L'idée vaut-elle la peine d'être exploitée ou lui manque-t-il les ingrédients du succès? La section un de ce guide vous aidera à répondre à cette question. On y décrit un processus d'évaluation de base et on y propose des conseils pratiques sur la façon d'évaluer objectivement les possibilités de succès d'une idée. La section deux vous aidera à franchir la seconde étape vers la commercialisation qui consiste à élaborer un plan commercial détaillé tenant compte de toute la complexité de la mise au point d'un produit. A cette étape, vous devrez probablement faire appel à des spécialistes tels que des comptables, des ingénieurs d'études, des agents de brevets et des experts en commercialisation. Ce guide constitue un point de départ pour vous aider à commercialiser une idée. Il vous aidera à prendre une décision éclairée quant à la validité de votre projet et vous fournira des renseignements de base sur la complexité, les coûts et l'éventuelle rentabilité de cette entreprise.

This report describes an air emissions inventory of fine particulate from point sources, area sources, and mobile sources in British Columbia, excluding the lower Fraser valley. Annual emissions data were obtained from the 1990 Emission Inventory System database. Information presented includes emissions by particle size fraction and by source. The appendix includes a description of the data analysis methodology, estimates of emissions from residential space heating (including particulates, carbon monoxide, nitrogen oxides, sulfur oxides, and volatile organics), and a provincial emission summary.

1992 Wascana Centre master plan

Regina : Wascana Centre Authority ; Toronto : Du Toit Allsopp Hillier, 1995. viii, 142 p. : Maps MICROLOG 96-03296 (2 fiche)

This report begins with background information on the Wascana Centre, an area near downtown Regina that includes parkland, the legislature building, and a university campus. It describes the planning history of the Centre from the Mawson plan of 1913 to recent developments (1987-92), discussing the issues underlying the 1992 plan which is the focus of this report. The report then discusses development issues concerning the Centre as a whole, including mature and developing areas, land uses, development character, edges, heritage preservation, landscape management, circulation, and height limits. The next section details development plans for the ten component parts of the Centre, including the legislative grounds, university campus, waterfowl park, heritage reserve, and Douglas Park and Arboretum. The final two sections discuss the facilities required for maintenance of the Centre environment, strategies for irrigation, plan implementation, and the relationship of the Centre to its neighbours, including its role in larger open space and circulation systems as well as the current and potential impacts of continuing urban development.

2 goes into 3 : reduction of rank-reduced orientation-from-color problem and many unknown lights to two-image known illuminant photometric stereo

By Mark S. Drew. Burnaby, BC : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1995. 15 p. : ill., Bibl. (Technical report / Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science and Laboratory for Computer & Communications Research (B.C.) ; CSS/LCCR TR95-08) MICROLOG 96-03184 (1 fiche) (Available on fiche only)

For a uniformly coloured Lambertian surface illuminated by a collection of point or extended light sources or interreflections, with unknown directions and strengths, illumination varies spectrally with orientation from the surface. If light varies sufficiently in colour and direction, then surface orientation can be recovered by a kind of photometric stereo, but with a single image and many unknown lights. RGB values lie on an ellipsoid in colour space, and the strengths and directions of three effective 'lights' can be recovered from regression and by additional constraints derived from three estimates of light source tilt. However, it is quite likely that illumination colour does not vary enough, in which case RGB points fill a planar two-dimensional ellipse in colour space. This paper presents a result for the ellipse boundary that enables recovery of the strengths and the angle between the two effective lights producing the two-dimensional shading. It then shows that equations for the tilts of the linearly related three effective lights in three dimensions give an additional three independent constraints. Solving yields lights in two dimensions and hence in three dimensions as well.

MICROLOG 96-03349 (2 fiche)

This study assesses the qualitative and quantitative impacts associated with investments by labour-sponsored venture capital corporations (LSVCCs) in small- and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in Canada. The investigators collected data in late 1994 for ten case-study companies with substantial equity invested by two established LSVCCs. The sample included seven investee firms of the Fonds de solidarité du travailleurs du Québec and three firms of the Working Opportunity Fund of British Columbia. The ten firms represented a wide range of sectors of the economy and stages of growth. The report also presents a fiscal cost-benefit analysis of the investment activities of the two LSVCCs using a three-step approach. Implications of the LSVCC investments are discussed with respect to such factors as employment and business development, supply of long-term capital to SMEs in key sectors, promotion of a rational labour adjustment process, and improvements in labour relations and productivity in the workplace.

Administrative issues in a secondary French immersion program : a teacher's perspective

By Michael J. Salvatori. London, ON : University of Western Ontario, Faculty of Education, 1994. v, 78 p. ONTERIS ON07876
MICROLOG 96-03119 (1 fiche)

This thesis examines several administrative issues related to the implementation and maintenance of a secondary French immersion program. The issues were identified as obstacles to successful development of the program at a London, Ontario high school. The first chapter details the need for specialised training for secondary immersion teachers and a practical strategy involving a school-based mentoring program for immersion teachers is outlined as a temporary solution. The second chapter relates the factors to be considered in course selection decisions, and the third chapter examines various factors and issues which must be considered in promoting the program. Resources on secondary French immersion are used to support the proposed strategies for program improvements. Recommendations and proposals are offered to serve as a basis for a school policy for the French immersion program.

Disposal of fine tailings produced in very large volumes at the Athabasca oil sands operations represents a major environmental problem, as these tailings are very difficult to dewater. To address this problem, a consortium of federal and Alberta government bodies, research organizations, and industry groups was formed to facilitate collaborative research on the nature of the fine tailings and on ways to improve tailings properties and reclaim tailings disposal areas. This publication details the advances in scientific knowledge of fine oil sand tailings, including results of consortium research. The first part of the publication describes the nature and properties of fine tailings generated by the Clark hot-water process. The second part reviews environmentally relevant properties of the tailings and discusses dry-landscape and wetland options for reclaiming the discarded tailings. The third part explores methods to reincorporate Clark hot-water tailings back into stable soil deposits. The final part examines the nature of fine tailings and reclamation options resulting from alternative bitumen extraction processes.

Injection steering magnet no. 2 resides inside the yoke of the TASC superconducting cyclotron. At high magnetic fields inside the cyclotron, it has been observed that the magnet had insufficient strength for proper injection of the beam, with saturation of the steering magnet as a result of leakage from the cyclotron yoke postulated as the cause. This study examines that hypothesis using a two-dimensional analytic model of the yoke and magnet. The model is used to analyze the original design of the steering magnet yoke and to examine the effects of various modifications of the design on the magnetic saturation. The results show the possibility of redesigning the injection steering magnet to reach its design field even at the maximum cyclotron field.

With certain moisture-susceptible aggregates and asphalt binders, water damage to asphalt pavements results in loss of asphalt/aggregate adhesion, known as stripping. The most practical and economical approach to suppress or inhibit stripping is the use of an antistripping additive. A new and innovative additive is tall oil pitch (TOP), a co-product of the pulp and paper industry. This paper presents results of tests examining the antistripping properties of TOP-modified asphalt. The investigators mixed four different asphalts, originating from two western Canadian crude oils, with aggregates from three different sources, and modified the asphalts with TOP. Tests included the retained Marshall stability test, a boiling test, and modified Lottman procedures. The results presented include comparison of TOP-modified asphalt antistripping properties against those of asphalts containing lime and commercial alkylamine antistripping agents. BC PR SC TR

The complexity and variability involved in bleached kraft pulp production leads to formation of several hundred structurally diverse chlorinated organic compounds. Specific chlorinated organics which have been shown to be toxic, bioaccumulative, and/or persistent require regulation. Some governments regulate the discharge of chlorinated organics from pulp mills using the bulk, non-specific AOX (adsorbable organic halogens) parameter. AOX is essentially a measure of organochlorines in bleached kraft mill effluents, since the content of other halogens is negligible. This report reviews the formation of AOX in the kraft mill process, the reduction of AOX discharges, methods for characterising AOX, the properties and composition of AOX, and the toxicity and environmental fate (bioaccumulation, transformation, and distribution) of AOX. It includes summaries of whole-AOX toxicity studies and molecular weight AOX, including the correlation between AOX levels and toxicity. The report ends with a discussion of the limitations of AOX as a regulatory parameter and the adequacy of effluent regulations based on AOX or alternatives. BC EV PR SC

Le document de travail offre à la population un cadre de discussion lui permettant de participer à la réforme de notre système de sécurité sociale. Le document examine en détail les raisons pour lesquelles le système ne répond plus aux besoins de nombreux Canadiens et ne convient plus au pays dans son ensemble. Le document de travail trace la voie des changements à venir et présente un éventail de propositions en vue de remodeler les programmes fédéraux dans les domaines de l'emploi, de l'acquisition du savoir et de la sécurité. Ces programmes comprennent le Régime d'assurance-chômage, les services de développement de l'emploi, les services de garde d'enfants ainsi que le soutien fédéral à l'éducation postsecondaire et à l'aide sociale. Ce document examine en profondeur le thème de l'éducation. Il explique de quelle façon le gouvernement fédéral appuie l'enseignement postsecondaire et il donne un aperçu de l'enseignement postsecondaire, de son évolution et de son état actuel, avec des comparaisons internationales, de même qu'une analyse des débouchés sur le marché du travail. On décrit le rôle fédéral sur le plan de l'enseignement postsecondaire ainsi que le soutien qui est accordé aux provinces et aux territoires, aux étudiants et aux établissements d'enseignement. Ensuite, on traite de l'avenir du soutien financier fédéral, et de la nécessité d'améliorer l'aide financière destinée aux étudiants. Enfin, on décrit un nouveau programme d'aide aux étudiants qui les aiderait à payer leurs frais de scolarité. CA DE ED PA SS ST

Apprenticeships generally last between two and five years, depending on the skilled occupation and related experience. Most of the training, about 90 per cent, is given on the job, under the supervision of a qualified journeyman. The remainder is normally given at a college of applied arts and technology or other approved training delivery agency. This document presents information on apprenticeship and looks at the following topics: for prospective apprentices; for employers; general information; special programs; and, quick reference to apprenticeship. Approach to the physical assessment of developments affecting fish habitat in the Great Lakes nearshore regions

Procedures now exist to quantify the impacts of physical changes on the productive capacity of fish habitat, allowing the evaluation of pre- and post-development scenarios, including any measures undertaken to compensate for habitat loss. This report outlines the methods and techniques available to evaluate the physical changes to fish habitat in the Great Lakes nearshore region. It begins with an overview of the applicable parts of the Fisheries Act respecting alteration or disruption of fish habitat, as well as of the types of projects that can affect fish habitat and the shore types and natural processes occurring on the Great Lakes. The report then describes approaches for assessing physical conditions and processes, including the preparation of information on pre-development site conditions, definitions of physical habitat characteristics, and assessment of impacts (areas lost) and may be required for assessment of physical impacts for different shore and project combinations. Aquatic community health of the Great Lakes

This paper summarises the current understanding of the health of the aquatic communities of the Great Lakes. The range of communities includes aquatic species and terrestrial species (piscivorous birds, mammals, and reptiles) that rely on aquatic food webs of the lakes or on habitat with associated wetlands and other near-shore environments. The paper begins with a discussion of concepts of ecosystem health and indicators of fish/wildlife and community health. It then assesses the current status and trends for fish and wildlife health in the Great Lakes and for community health, including a case study of Lake Erie. Finally, the paper discusses the ecosystem management implications of the observed status and trends.

Aquatic habitat and wetlands of the Great Lakes

This paper provides a basis for discussion of the habitat values of the Great Lakes. It begins with a review of the habitat types found in the lakes, their coastal wetlands, shorelines, tributaries, and connecting channels. The ecological significance with regard to nutrient cycling, productivity, water quality and quantity, and biodiversity is also noted. The paper then reports on the state of the habitats in each lake and their connecting channels, and discusses the types of impacts on those habitats and the importance of each impact as a threat to each type. These impacts include those resulting from chemical changes, hydrologic changes, physical process changes such as sedimentation and temperature, physical alteration and destruction, and changes to community structure. Finally, the paper reviews existing Canadian and US initiatives addressing Great Lakes habitats (information gathering, habitat protection, restoration, legislation) and outlines where current actions and future initiatives need to focus in order to ensure a healthy web of habitats in the lakes.

This guide is intended to demonstrate the various stages of Archean arc evolution in the Abitibi belt: arc formation, arc-arc collision, arc fragmentation, and arc exhumation. After an introduction on the general geology of the Belt and the stages of arc evolution and pluton emplacement, the guide describes a four-day excursion covering the area between Rouyn-Noranda/Val-d'Or to the north and La Sarre/Amos to the north. Travel directions for each stop on the excursion are accompanied by descriptions and interpretations of the outcrops observed.

Ce document analyse dans quelle mesure les prestations ordinaires d'assurance-chômage, (POAC), favorisent la recherche productive d'un emploi. Il repose en général sur la distinction qui existe entre l'intrant du processus (intensité de la recherche) et ses deux extrants (probabilité de trouver un nouvel emploi et nouveau salaire). La partie 1 explique brièvement la théorie économique qui permet d'associer ces valeurs à la politique d'assurance-chômage tandis qu'à la partie 2, on décrit et résume les variables de la base de données des Centres d'emploi du Canada dont nous sommes servis. Les résultats de l'étude sur l'intensité de la recherche apparaissent à la partie 3, que suit une discussion de la méthode et du sous-ensemble de données utilisés. La partie 4 reprend approximativement la même méthode pour étudier l'effet récapitulatif et formule quelques conclusions. Une série d'annexes techniques complètent le document.

This study investigated the beliefs of three teachers about the nature and learning of mathematics. The teachers were using cooperative learning techniques in teaching secondary-level mathematics and their beliefs were assessed using a brief questionnaire and an interview partially structured according to each teacher's responses to the questionnaire. Three lessons were observed for each teacher to determine the relationship between their beliefs and practice. The teachers' similarities in expressed beliefs and differences in cooperative learning practices are noted. Broad descriptions of each teacher's beliefs and practice are provided as a source for other teachers' reflective development.

Canada's federal regulatory policy contains mandatory requirements that departments and agencies, before sponsoring a regulation, must show that regulation is the best alternative and that the regulatory program is structured to maximise the gains to beneficiaries in relation to costs to Canadians. This document is a guide to the use of cost benefit analysis for demonstrating that a proposed regulation maximises net benefit. It reviews how cost benefit analysis fits into the regulatory process, provides a framework for choosing regulatory and non-regulatory alternatives, and describes the type and level of analysis that must be completed before preparing Regulatory Impact Analysis Statements. The guide ends with sections on evaluating impacts to business, consumer impact assessment, evaluation of risk and uncertainty, cost estimation, discounting, and evaluation of environmental quality & other public goods.

This study considers the question of long-run goals for fiscal policy once the federal budget is balanced. The study makes the case that a target level for a sustainable ratio of debt to gross domestic product (GDP) would be 25 percent. Such a ratio is based on the following factors: the likelihood that interest rates will continue to exceed the rate of growth of GDP; the increasing reluctance of investors to lend to borrowers already in debt; the federal government's inability to ignore negative political reaction to high taxes; low program spending rates and high interest payments to foreigners; and the widespread attitude that living standards of future generations should not be reduced to make transfers toward the well-off elderly. Implications of alternative deficit-to-GDP ratio targets are examined using a simulation model.

Centre de recherche sur les transports ; no. 96-06) (Publication / Université de Montréal. Département d'Informatique et de recherche opérationnelle ; no. 1017)

The main objective of this paper is to present and study bounding procedures based on Lagrangean relaxation and resource decomposition, as a step toward the efficient resolution of large-scale multicommodity-capacitated fixed charge network design problems. The proposed procedures are easily adapted to the difficult case where integrality restrictions on the flow variables are imposed. The paper presents computational results for this case and compares them to those obtained by a traditional branch-and-bound code. The upper bounding procedure makes use of the solutions generated by the Lagrangean subproblems in a novel fashion to evade the difficulty of finding feasible solutions in multicommodity networks. Several capacity allocations are generated by projecting the flows obtained from solving Lagrangean subproblems, and a generalised add-drop heuristic is used for each allocation. The effectiveness of this procedure is noted for those problems where the flow costs dominate the fixed costs, and its efficiency is also compared to that of a traditional branch-and-bound code.

ISBN 0-88656-646-0
MICROLOG 96-03299 (1 fiche)

Specialised livestock arrangements can encourage more efficient farm management by maximising available resources. This publication begins with an outline of the advantages and drawbacks of a specialised livestock arrangement and the points to consider when entering into such an arrangement. Types of agreements are then reviewed, including custom hiring and leasing, joint ventures or partnerships, corporations, and co-operatives. Examples are provided to illustrate the contribution approach to handling such agreements, as well as the different types of specialised livestock arrangements. The examples include sample agreement forms.

Calgary (Alta.). Calgary, AB : The City, 1995. 44 p.

The new Calgary Transportation Plan was approved at a public hearing in May 1995. The plan is based on a vision of the kind of city Calgary could become over the next 30 years, the central theme of which is to master or temper automobile use in the future. Progress will have to be monitored at regular intervals to ensure that the city is moving in a direction that upholds the spirit of the Plan and the wishes of citizens. This report outlines a monitoring and reporting system designed to ensure that policy directives established in the Plan are being pursued and that the inherent flexibility of the Plan to respond to ongoing scrutiny and review is maintained. The report reviews the background of the plan and then describes the monitoring framework. Details are included of the performance indicators and expectations or targets for each component and dimension of the monitoring system.

Members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the World Trade Organization have negotiated and accepted a new Agreement on Subsidies and Countervailing Measures. This commentary argues that the new subsidies code contains substantial improvements over the previous Tokyo Round rules. It explains the definition of subsidy used in the new code, the procedures for settling trade disputes concerning subsidies, and other noteworthy changes from the earlier code. Other topics discussed are: the new code's ability to discipline the use of countervailing measures, notably those of the United States against Canadian companies; concessions to the interests of developing countries; and the role of a Dispute Settlement Board in subsidy cases and in actions in parallel with countervailing cases.

The goal of this paper is to generate discussion regarding proposals to amend the insider trading provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act. The paper analyzes whether the Act's insider trading provisions are still needed and, if they are still needed, what changes should be made to modernize them. This is done by first examining if it would be better to eliminate all the Act's insider trading provisions, or to keep and update them. The paper then examines individually the three main aspects of the provisions to determine if these elements, on their own, should be repealed or updated. These three aspects are insider reporting, speculative trading prohibitions, and civil liability. Finally, the paper considers whether an insider trading penal liability provision should be added to the Act.

The paper first considers arguments for and against repealing the Act's takeover bid provisions. It then discusses proposals for amending those provisions, including amendments related to takeover bid thresholds, early warning disclosure, definitions, exemptions, time periods, notices, integration periods, thresholds for compulsory acquisitions, conversions to partial bids, leveraged buyouts, and takeover bid fines and penalties. The paper finally considers issues related to defensive measures taken in response to hostile takeover bids and the directors' responsibilities in such circumstances.

The purpose of this study is to examine the role that Canada's unemployment insurance (UI) program has played as an economic stabiliser over the past 15 years. The study considers what the performance of the Canadian economy might have been if the UI program had not responded to cyclical change in the level of economic activity. More specifically, the WEFA Canada Canadian Macro model of the economy is used to simulate an economic scenario based on the assumption that the revenues and expenditures associated with the UI program had been held at levels consistent with an economy operating at its trend level of gross domestic product. This simulated performance is then compared with actual performance to see whether and by how much the UI program acted to reduce income in economic peaks and increase income in recessions. The alterations in the perceived impact of UI over time are also noted.

The guide begins by reviewing the objectives and guiding principles of the Act and the role of the Canadian Environmental Assessment Agency. It then provides an overview of the federal EA process, including self-directed EAs (screenings or comprehensive studies) and public reviews, and the roles and responsibilities of participants. The final part of the guide details the procedures, from a user's point of view, required to conduct EAs in compliance with the legislation. Separate chapters cover the eight steps of a self-directed EA and the seven steps of a public review. Appendices include reference guides on addressing cumulative environmental effects, maintaining a public registry for projects, and determining whether a project is likely to cause significant adverse environmental effects. Using cross-sectional data from the 1986 Statistics Canada Labour Market Activity Survey, the paper first examines the distribution of employment across firm sizes and compares small and large firms' job characteristics in terms of unionization, pension plan coverage, extent of permanent layoffs, and wages. Subsequent chapters test various hypotheses related to wage differences among Canadian workers by controlling for multiple dimensions of labor quality and observable workers' characteristics. The paper concludes with discussions of potential explanations for the wage/size relationship and the implications of the results.

The study of the deposit's natural structures and processes can provide valuable insight toward the eventual design and site selection of an underground nuclear fuel waste repository. Specifically, the deposit provides analogue information relevant to the stability of UO₂ fuel waste, the performance of clay-based barriers, radionuclide migration, colloid formation, radiolysis, fission-product geochemistry, and general aspects of water-rock interaction. This report reviews and summarizes the analogue information and data from the Cigar Lake analogue studies for the processes and scenarios expected to occur in the proposed disposal system for used nuclear fuel.

Random test sequences generated by circular paths offer very high quality testing for random access memories (RAMs); in particular, they detect pattern sensitive faults undetectable by built-in self-test (BIST) schemes based on deterministic test patterns. To overcome widespread skepticism concerning the effectiveness of random patterns in RAM self-testing, this paper describes a number of experiments which examine the practical effectiveness of random built-in self-tests for RAM. The test patterns, generated in the experiments using a circular self-test path, are used to stimulate the address lines, data lines, and the read/write output. Fault coverage is examined using the most common fault models and the experimental results are compared to those based on theoretical analysis. The paper also presents a set of simple expressions which accurately predict fault coverage for each type of memory fault.

Committing to user choices in mixed initiative CSPs

In a mixed initiative system for solving a constraint satisfaction problem (CSP), both the user and the system make choices in trying to find a solution. These choices typically involve deciding what values to assign to variables. A desirable property in mixed initiative systems is that they commit to user choices: the user assignments should be retained as long as there is a complete solution containing those assignments. This paper shows that several backtracking algorithms, typically used to solve constraint satisfaction problems, do not commit to user choices. The main contribution of the paper is to show why this occurs and also to present an algorithm that does commit to user choices. This algorithm is a slight modification of the backtracking algorithm of Ginsberg (1993).

Presents the findings of a task force charged with the mandate to make recommendations regarding a more efficient and effective approach to regional development in each of the proposed economic zones of Newfoundland and Labrador. The task force examined two broad areas of concern: organizational structures, and programs and services for community economic development. To achieve its stated goals, the task force held consultative meetings around the province, received submissions from interested parties, and conducted primary and secondary research. This task force report begins with an introduction on community economic development, the task force's consultation process, and the history of approaches to regional economic development in the province. It then presents the task force recommendations in sections covering the use of volunteers, the establishment of economic development zones, the Appendices include zone profiles, findings of an attitude survey, and lists of briefs presented.

De nombreux articles et rapports publiés récemment suggèrent que le gouvernement devrait introduire un nouveau programme d'allocation de logement au lieu de construire des logements à but non lucratif. Ce document contient des renseignements généraux sur les allocations de logement et les logements à but non lucratif en Ontario. Ces 2 programmes très différents sont ensuite comparés en fonction de leur capacité à atteindre divers objectifs importants liés au logement.

Westland Resource Group. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Integrated Resources Policy Branch, 1995. 54 p. : ill.

This comparison of forest management practices, regulations, and codes of various jurisdictions with the British Columbia Forest Practices Code is intended to provide government ministries, interested public, and the newly formed Forest Practices Board with a synoptic overview of the specific forest practices and environmental protection measures in areas having some form of regulated forest practices. The jurisdictions include subdivisions of Canada, the United States, Germany, and Australia, as well as three European countries (United Kingdom, Finland, and Sweden). The overview begins with a review of some distinguishing characteristics of these jurisdictions, such as forest land area and annual timber harvest. It then presents a table facilitating comparison of particular practices and codes under such topics as legal and planning framework, forest roads and timber harvesting, silviculture, soil conservation, water quality and riparian management, habitat and biodiversity, and landscapes.

These properties are compared to the properties of the Saskatchewan bentonite used as a reference bentonite for the Canadian Nuclear Fuel Waste Management Program. The comparisons will indicate the feasibility of using several sources of sodium bentonite in a nuclear fuel waste disposal facility. The report begins with an overview of the geology of bentonites and a listing of producers of sodium bentonite in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Japan. It then presents results of tests (or data from the literature) on the physical and mechanical properties of commercially available natural bentonites. Properties examined include particle sizing and physical characteristics, mineralogy, chemical properties, swelling pressures developed by bentonite clays, and hydraulic conductivity.

The purpose of this fact sheet is to raise public awareness of the environmental implications of consumption, by providing people with information that will help them to appreciate the connections between their lifestyles, their consumption behaviour, and the environment. To this end, this fact sheet examines the environmental implications of a single consumer item that is familiar to most Canadians, the quick-service restaurant hamburger. It reveals just how extensive and far-reaching the environmental implications of this simple but common component of the Canadian lifestyle can be, by using a life cycle approach to the analysis. It also shows how complex many of the issues are, how difficult it is to address them, steps being taken by industry to find environmentally sound solutions, and the effects of personal actions of consumers.

The study methodology included regional focus group sessions with people from three demographic groups (baby boomers, post-boomers, and empty nesters) and a national survey of 2,460 Canadians focusing on determining the differences in future housing preferences of the three market segments. Issues investigated include whether and why Canadians prefer moving to new or resale homes, or staying and renovating current homes; attitudes toward house type, financing, size, energy use, and major home features, including those related to environmental sensitivity; and whether housing consumers are moving up or down in housing size and price. The report also includes province-by-province highlights of the study results.

This case study was completed as part of a national research study of a selected sample of secondary schools, conducted to identify and analyse successful practice in schools in different regions and to suggest policy implications. The study examines five issues: the meaning and recognition of success; the interaction between the school and its context; the influence of structures, processes, and culture of the school in fostering success; the characteristics of student life in the school; and services provided to students at risk of becoming dropouts. The school examined in this particular study is a small high school in the centre of Toronto, situated in a commercial building, which caters specifically to at-risk students, dropouts, and street youth. Specific issues discussed include community reactions to the school, the roles of teachers and street workers, the democratic organisation of the school, how the school meets the students' survival needs, compensatory education programs, and the school's anti-discriminatory and non-violence policies. The appendix describes the study methodology.

The report then identifies the existing supply of and demand for tourist facilities and services in each area, and assesses the existing agencies that are undertaking tourism development and marketing. This leads to an evaluation of historical visitation patterns to the province and region, financial assessments of six tourism opportunities. Crooked Lake fish habitat mapping, 1995

By W.K. Liaw. Saskatoon, SK : Dept. of Environment & Resource Management, Saskatchewan Fisheries Laboratory, 1995. ii, 31 p. : Maps, Bibl. (Fisheries technical report / Saskatchewan Fisheries Branch ; 95-5)

MICROLOG 96-03287 (1 fiche)

Macrophyte growth in Crooked Lake, Saskatchewan, has been a concern to resource users of the lake for some years. It has become apparent that a lake management plan is required to address this problem, but fish habitat data needed for developing such a plan has been lacking. This report presents findings of a study conducted to obtain information on fish habitat in the nearshore areas of the lake and to map and assess the extent of growth and distribution of submersed and emergent macrophytes in that area of the lake. Results presented include maps of foreshore substrates, backshore development and special features, backshore vegetation, backshore slope, littoral zone bottom substrate and submersed vegetation, areas of extensive emergent vegetation growth, and boating facilities. The data obtained should provide a sound basis for formulating a management plan for the lake.

Decomposing U.S. nominal interest rates into expected inflation and ex ante real interest rates using structural VAR methodology

By Pierre St-Amant. Ottawa : Bank of Canada, 1996. iv, 19 p. : Ill., Bibl. (Working paper / Bank of Canada ; 96-2 ISSN 1192-5434) ISBN 0-662-24127-4

The author uses a structural vector autoregression (VAR) methodology to decompose US nominal interest rates into an expected inflation component and an ex-ante real interest rate component. He identifies inflation expectations and ex-ante real interest rate shocks by assuming that nominal interest rates and inflation expectations move one-for-one in the long run (they are cointegrated) and that the real interest rate is stationary. The paper includes discussion of the underlying theoretical model used in the interest rate study, the structural VAR method, the variance decomposition of the nominal long-term interest rate, and the impulse responses to expected inflation and ex-ante real interest rate shocks. Finally, the paper presents the estimated series of expected inflation and ex-ante real interest rates and uses them to analyse some historical episodes.

This report summarises information from the 1986 version of Canada's Forest Inventory, describing forests for Rowe's 90 Forest Sections and the larger (ten) Forest Regions. For each section and region, the report presents resource data in several series of twelve figures providing information on such parameters as area of inventory by land class, area of stocked productive forest by forest type and by predominant genus, average volume by age class, area of productive forest by stocking class and by site class, percent volume by species group, and average growth to maturity. The extensive use of histograms enables comparison of sections and regions at a glance. Maps by section facilitate examination of regional trends; forest area, timber yield, growth, and access statistics are reported. The data are designed to assist ecologists and foresters in their evaluation and understanding of Canadian forest resources.

Destreaming makes headlines : an investigation into press treatment of destreaming

By Pauline E. Regan. London, ON : University of Western Ontario, Faculty of Graduate Studies, 1994. ix, 129 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07887 MICROLOG 96-02960 (2 fiche)

This critical inquiry investigates press treatment of destreaming and any resulting influence arising from that coverage. The case study is defined by analysis of newspapers and interviews, as well as a literature review concerning the press, education, and public opinion. The literature provides a context for the 55 accounts of destreaming found across the Globe & Mail, Toronto Star, and London Free Press, but to the various themes emanating from discussions with four London parents and the London Free Press education reporter. Dominating these discussions are the themes of reader disenchantment, poor education coverage, confusion surrounding destreaming, low-level press influence, and widespread dissatisfaction with the education community. Concrete suggestions are offered to change the public's response to problematic newspaper coverage, to improve workings in the Ministry of Education & Training, and to obtain more meaningful communication between educators, parents, and the press.

Development and evaluation of a non-radioactive, colorimetric, membrane-based gene probe assay for Newcastle disease virus identification, in particular for the detection and identification of RNA-based viruses using the viral simulant Newcastle disease virus (NDV). The first part of this report describes experiments intended to evaluate a commercial gene probe assay in terms of sensitivity and compares assay sensitivity to that of a first-generation gene probe for NDV developed in-house. The second part describes the design of a second-generation NDV gene probe and evaluation of the probe with respect to cross-reactivity and sensitivity. The study provides an indication of the level of sensitivity that can be expected using a colorimetric, membrane-based system for short and long gene probes and demonstrates the importance of screening gene probes for specificity. The research reported will serve as a benchmark for comparison to other gene probe assay systems under investigation.

This study describes the development and evaluation of gene probes as tools for biological agent

A Distributed intelligent information system for ad hoc knowledge discovery in databases

This paper describes a distributed information system which features a graphic user interface incorporating natural language input and which provides ad-hoc knowledge discovery in relational databases. The system is comprised of multiple processes which communicate with each other over a network. The knowledge discovery process involves extracting generalisations from data using background knowledge in the form of concept hierarchies and a learning procedure based on an attribute-oriented induction technique. The natural language understanding process is a parser based on head-driven phrase structure grammar, a modern lexicon-based grammar formalism better equipped than older rule-based approaches for handling the often idiosyncratic behaviour of words. To generate semantic interpretations, the parser makes use of a process which orders logical access paths in unnormalised databases based on the strength of their dependency structures and on their efficiency of execution.

The Kitimat River is one of at least 15 coastal British Columbia rivers that support a significant population of eulachon (Thaleichthys pacificus), an important food source for indigenous peoples. This report presents results of a study of eulachon productivity and stock size on the river. Investigators collected samples of spawning eulachons, emerging larvae, and unhatched eggs, and estimated egg and larval densities, total production of eggs and larvae from the river during the main spawning period, relative fecundity and mean weight, and total spawning biomass. Comparison of larval production at different sites in the river enabled identification of main spawning sites, and analyses of water temperatures were used to calculate the thermal units required for incubation. The results provide a basis for evaluating the impacts of industrial and urban wastes on the eulachon.

Management of walleye could be improved if relative contributions of populations originating at Port Severn and Moon River could be known. This report presents results of a field study of walleye reproductive activities in the Moon and Severn rivers. Study objectives were to detect initial movement of walleye in its earliest developmental stage, and thus allow a first approximation of reproductive success, and to compare external morphological and pigmentary characteristics of walleye and yellow perch free embryos and larger larvae. Results presented include environmental characteristics of the study areas, species composition, mean diameters of walleye eggs, and total length of embryos. Detailed comparisons are made of the morphology, pigmentation, and taxonomic features of walleye and yellow perch to aid in correct identification.

Effect of environmental education on encouraging responsible environmental citizenship of gifted students

This thesis describes a field study which evaluated the effect of an environmental education instructional unit on the environmental knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors of 138 gifted students aged 9-14 in grades 5-8. The students were in a part-time enrichment program and the instruction was a one-day intensive unit called Endangered Spaces. A recurrent institutional cycle design was used, and pre- and post-treatment observations were collected from three successive instructional groups through a three-part questionnaire. The findings indicated the differences in awareness, self-perceptions, and actions before and after treatment, and the effects of environmental education for gifted students on responsible environmental citizenship. The results also demonstrated which procedures students felt were most influential. Implications for research and practice are discussed.

Previous studies have demonstrated decreased +Gz tolerance when preceded by zero or negative Gz, referred to as the push-pull effect. This paper reports an experiment conducted to observe the effect of varying time duration at negative Gz on the push-pull effect. In the experimental sessions, 6 subjects were subjected to five relaxed exposures to +2.25 Gz on an acceleration platform, the first and last exposures being control runs that were preceded by +1 Gz. Each experimental run was preceded by -2 Gz for 2, 5, or 15 seconds. Blood pressure was monitored and visual light loss was assessed at +2.25 Gz using a light bar.

Effects of benefit rate reduction and changes in entitlement (Bill C-113) on unemployment, job search behaviour and new job quality

This paper examines the effect of the April 1993 Bill C-113 on the duration of unemployment spells, the job-search behaviour of the unemployed, and the quality of new jobs (as measured by wages and hours worked) found after a spell of unemployment. The study focuses mainly on a comparison of two groups: individuals who were subject to the legislation in effect prior to Bill C-113 and those who had to cope with the bill's less-generous unemployment insurance (UI) provisions. The dataset used for the study was created as part of the Canadian Out of Employment Panel study and was drawn from two six-week sampling periods bracketing the April 1993 legislative change.

Bill C-113, effective April 1993, made to changes to Canada's regular unemployment insurance (UI) system. For most individuals, benefits were cut to 57% of insurable earnings. Individuals who either voluntarily quit their jobs without just cause or were dismissed from their jobs had their benefits cut to zero. This paper examines the effects of Bill C-113 on the UI take-up rates of job quitters and the mechanisms by which the bill reduced the claim rates of job quitters. The paper develops an analytical framework for decomposing the decline in UI take-up into a set of components, each associated with a different mechanism of adjustment to the disemployment. These mechanisms are a discouragement effect (fewer quitters applying for UI), a rejection effect (more UI applications by quitters rejected) and an incentive effect (disentitled individuals induced to become re-employed more quickly as a result of the benefit cut). The data used in the paper come from administrative Record of Employment data, the Statistics Canada Labour Force Survey, and detailed microdata in the Canadian Out of Employment Panel data set.

Effects of Great Lakes basin environmental contaminants on human health

This paper examines the potential human health effects of exposure to certain Great Lakes Basin environmental contaminants from the following six groups: persistent organochlorine pesticides, chlorinated aromatic hydrocarbons, heavy metals, airborne pollutants, radionuclides, and microbial contaminants. The paper focuses on the most recent results of human health studies undertaken in the US and Canada specifically addressing issues of human exposures in the Great Lakes region and potential effects. The paper begins with an overview of priority contaminants selected on the basis of environmental presence and persistence, bioavailability, toxicity, and bioconcentration/bioaccumulation potential. It then reviews sources of these contaminants and routes of human exposure, including ingestion through food and water. Populations at greatest risk from these contaminants are also identified, and trends in exposure to the six contaminant groups are discussed. A review of the health effects considers effects of the contaminants on reproduction, development, hormone disruption, the nervous and immune systems, respiratory health, cancer development, and genetic effects. The paper concludes with an outline of knowledge gaps and directions for future research.

The Ontario educational ministry published its Discipline in 1986 as a resource for high schools implementing provisions in the Circular Ontario Schools, Intermediate and Senior Divisions (1984). That circular required all high schools to implement a code of student behavior. This thesis examines the degree to which elementary schools follow the guidelines outlined in Discipline when implementing their codes. Theories of discipline are discussed, behavior codes of 20 randomly selected Ontario elementary schools were analyzed, and a model for codes of behavior was developed based on the research performed.

This paper examines the empirical performance of alternatives to the monetary aggregates currently published by the Bank of Canada. The criteria used in examining the performance of the aggregates were: the information content and causality of the aggregates; the stability of the demand function for the aggregates; and the performance of the aggregates in a model where inflation is expressed as a function of the output gap, money gap (deviation of money from its long-run demand), and term structure. Eight alternatives to the four current monetary aggregates are proposed and defined and their performance is compared. Five of the new aggregates are found to be deserving of further attention.

This paper examines the impacts of the Canadian unemployment insurance (UI) system on employer behaviour by comparing the experiences of firms in two manufacturing industries in Canada and the United States. In each industry, establishments were surveyed in Ontario, a jurisdiction with no experience rating, and in US states with high and low degrees of experience rating. The research strategy involved observing the layoff and training patterns of employers producing common products within the same market but operating under different UI regimes. The operating hypotheses were that, other things being equal, the Ontario firms would report more layoffs (specifically temporary layoffs) and less training than their counterparts in the states with liberal or tight UI regimes. To consider the impact of the range of possible factors explaining the differences observed, establishment turnover models were specified and tested. These models incorporated variables such as sales growth, employment, recent technological change, innovation in human resource practice, collective bargaining status, and the female and youth shares of the workforce.

Newly available data from the 1986-87 and 1988-90 Labour Market Analysis Survey make it possible to improve understanding of labour market dynamics by exploring the employment state for a very large number of individuals in two adjacent periods. This paper explores the patterns of job duration across the provinces and over the time span covered by those two surveys. It examines the type of job spells captured by the surveys, the duration of new jobs as well as that of the resulting stock of jobs, and the association of duration with a variety of personal and job characteristics. The paper also explores the possible connections between job duration and the regulatory framework in the context of which labour market outcomes emerge. Of particular interest is the possibility that the variable entrance requirement (VER) in the unemployment insurance system conditions the length of employment spells. The paper includes an econometric study of the determinants of job duration, including the possible role of the VER. A final topic examined in the paper is the nature and possible evolution over time of non-standard employment.

This includes the financial performance, its operational and program performance, and its legal compliance, fairness, equity and probity. En 1986, on a procédé à un essai près de Second Falls (N.-B.) pour évaluer le potentiel des déchets ligneux industriels d'une usine de pâte comme produit d'amendement pour l'assainissement des terres. Trois types de déchets ligneux ont été épandus sur du sol minéral avant la plantation d'épinettes noires. Au bout d'une saison de croissance, il était manifeste que soit l'épandage d'un engrais, soit la plantation d'une végétation fixatrice d'azote s'imposait pour assurer la survie et la croissance des semis. Le projet a ensuite donné lieu à une série d'expériences englobant l'épandage d'engrais et la plantation de végétation fixatrice d'azote. Ce rapport fait état des taux de croissance des végétaux sur différentes placettes et donne des directives au sujet des activités de recherche-développement futures visant à faciliter l'assainissement et le reboisement de sites déclassés et Improductifs.

This report examines a number of questions regarding whether growth and yield information developed for native conifers in Nova Scotia can be applied to Norway spruce (Picea abies (L.) Karst.). That species had been introduced to the province by the 1920s and has enjoyed increasing popularity, attributed to its superior growth on a variety of sites. Investigators carried out stem analyses in six older Norway spruce stands on the Nova Scotia mainland, five of which were plantation stands varying in age from 33 to 57 years at stump height. The report compares height growth patterns for individual Norway spruce with selected land capability curves for native softwoods, actual height growth versus predicted height based on native softwoods with the same site index, actual and predicted total volumes, and actual and predicted merchantable volumes.

In the atmosphere, gases such as carbon dioxide, methane, chlorofluorocarbons and nitrous oxide affect the earth's heat balance by re-absorbing infrared radiation transmitted from earth. The objectives of this study are to estimate the contribution of landfilled municipal solid waste (MSW) to GHG emissions in 1990 and 2000, and to examine the change the emissions in year the 2000 associated with the adoption of different waste management scenarios, and to quantify and compare the net GHG emissions for the management of different waste materials by alternative waste reduction and utilisation options, using a life-cycle approach.

These components of payroll taxes include unemployment insurance premiums, pension plan contributions, workers' compensation premiums, and provincial health/post-secondary education taxes. The latter two components are levied on employers only. The paper reports on the variation between provinces of the structure, level, growth, and role of each component, notes which component is the largest contributor to the rise in payroll taxes, and compares payroll tax levels in Canada with those in other western industrialised countries.

Feasibility study for toll highways and private sector involvement for highway development in New Brunswick

(Étude de faisabilité des autoroutes...): 96-03342/1. MICROLOG 96-03341 (1 fiche)

New Brunswick has determined a need for an updated highway system. The need to explore alternative financing approaches and development arrangements, in view of provincial funding limitations, is critical to accelerating the province's highway updating program and securing the resultant economic benefits. This need has led to a study of the feasibility of toll highways and private-sector involvement in New Brunswick highway development, whose findings are presented in this report. The report begins with a review of the history of toll highways, tolling systems, and toll technology. A toll revenue analysis for the province considers four tolling scenarios: open tolling on the existing highway system, closed tolling on an upgraded system, modified open tolling on the upgraded system, and modified open tolling on the system and other arterials. Financing options and private sector involvement options are then examined, including value capture, development impact fees, asset swaps, leasing of commercial rights, hidden tolls, privatisation, build-operate-transfer, and lease-develop-operate arrangements. Finally, the report discusses implementation of toll financing with or without private sector participation. AP PR SC TR

Final report to Halifax Harbour Cleanup Inc. on air quality in the environs of Halifax Harbour

Prepared by Jacques Whitford Environment Ltd. and Porter Dillon Ltd. Halifax: Halifax Harbour Cleanup Inc., 1991. iv, 45 p.: Bibl. MICROLOG 96-03099 (1 fiche)

This study reviews existing local air quality in the Halifax-Dartmouth area and assesses the relative effects on local air quality of construction and operation of a major regional sewage treatment plant and an oil-from-sludge plant at the same site. To determine the type and quantity of expected emissions of volatile organics from the plants, a literature survey was conducted. These emission assumptions were then subjected to air dispersion modelling to estimate the relative levels of emitted compounds up to three kilometres from the emission source. Volatile organic emissions were of interest in this study as they are known to contribute to production of ground-level ozone and have also been implicated as possible carcinogens. The study also evaluates air quality impacts from activities associated with the construction of the two plants. AP EV MU SC

Firms, industries and cross-subsidies : patterns in the distribution of UI benefits and taxes

By Miles Corak and Wendy Pyper. Hull, PQ : Human Resources Development Canada, 1995. 35 p. : ill., Bibl. (Unemployment insurance evaluation series / Canada. Human Resources Development Canada) On cover: UI impacts on employer behaviour. CCG-P no. IN-AH-201E/03/95
MICROLOG 96-03228 (1 fiche)

The objective of this paper is to document the extent and nature of the cross-subsidies occurring through unemployment insurance (UI) and to explain them in an accounting sense. The analysis is conducted at the industry and firm levels to highlight patterns of cross-subsidisation both between and within industries. The analysis is based on administrative data sets that together offer universal coverage of firms, their workers, and UI beneficiaries. The results, which also include information on redistribution of moneys between provinces, are relevant to the debate concerning the reform of UI premium rates and of particular interest to discussion of experience rating. The paper discusses the use of experience rating as a UI policy option based on industry rating, firm rating, or a combination of industry and firm rating.

First interim report to the Honourable Dan Miller, Minister of Skills, Training and Labour

British Columbia. Construction Industry Review Panel. Victoria : The Panel, 1996. 27 p.
MICROLOG 96-03379 (1 fiche)

The British Columbia Ministry of Skills, Training & Labour appointed a panel to review a number of issues in the construction industry, including the impacts of industry changes on training, employment and equity, contractual relationships, and other matters such as labour relations. The panel consulted with interested parties, held public hearings, and received submissions representing a wide range of views. This report explains the context of the review, with reference to the characteristics of the provinces construction industry, competitive environment, workforce, labour mobility, training and apprenticeship, equity in training and employment, safety, and labour relations. The report then presents the results of the panel consultations in three sections: issues beyond the Ministry mandate, including public construction procurement policies, contractor licensing, and government regulation; including formation of a single bargaining unit for the construction industry, alternate unions, and enforcement of legislation; and issues requiring further consideration, mainly related to collective bargaining.

Five year business plan, 1996-2000

Okanagan Valley Tree Fruit Authority (B.C.). Summerland, BC : The Authority, 1996. 16 p. : ill.
MICROLOG 96-02862 (1 fiche)

The Okanagan Valley Tree Fruit Authority was established in 1990 with a ten-year mandate to assist British Columbia fruit growers in a period of transition. This business plan outlines a more focused role for the Authority in the second half of its mandate. The new role centers on replanting and revitalization, reflecting results of an industry consultation. The plan document reviews the state of the province's tree fruit industry and the Authority's relations with the provincial government. It then presents the Authority's vision of the industry, mission statement, primary clients and performance measures, and key strategic directions. The document ends with descriptions of strategic priorities, goals, and objectives in the following areas: orchard renovation, market opportunities, stakeholder enhancement, communications and community relations, and program support and administration.

FLAP-X is a computer program that provides a simulation model of a simple, hypothetical forest landscape that is subject to disturbance by fire. The program graphically shows the landscape and its corresponding age distribution changing over time. The user can test a wide range of landscape sizes, fire disturbance rates, fire sizes, and patterns of fire disturbance over time, and see the effect on the forest age distribution. This manual provides directions on installing and running FLAP-X and includes a case study example for illustration. The appendices include file listings and notes on certain aspects of program operation.

A forest development plan describes and illustrates how harvesting and road development for a specific area will be managed for a period of at least five years. This guidebook, prepared to help forest resource managers plan and implement sound forest practices that comply with the Forest Practices Code of British Columbia, focuses on the key content requirements of a forest development plan and its related administration. Sections of the guidebook cover general plan requirements and specific requirements related to wetlands and surface waters, cultural heritage resources, terrain stability, forest health, range, forest recreation, visual landscape, watershed and wildlife management, biodiversity, fire protection, harvesting, forest roads, community watersheds, mapping, and public consultation and advertising. The appendix includes a plan text outline, example tables, and a plan content checklist.

Forest practices code timber supply analysis

Victoria : Ministry of Forests ; Ministry of Environment, Lands & Parks, 1996. vi, 33 p. : ill., Bibl. ISBN 0-7726-2660-X
MICROLOG 96-03360 (1 fiche)

The Forest Practices Code of British Columbia makes sustainable forest practices a requirement of law. Implementing the Code will bring many benefits associated with sustainable forestry but will also entail some costs. Perhaps the most far-reaching impact of the Code is the effect it may have on short- and long-term timber supply. This report contains an approximation of the impact of implementing the Code on provincial and regional harvest levels. The approximation is based on analyses of six of the provinces Timber Supply Areas, selected to be representative of coastal, central/northern interior, and southern interior regions. The analyses are limited to the effects of various Code requirements regarding riparian management areas, biodiversity, watershed assessment, identified wildlife, soil conservation, visual quality objectives, and watershed restoration. The appendices contain results, tables, & commentary that outline the methods and inputs used to derive the timber harvesting land base and to construct the timber supply model data set for the analyses done to assess the impact of riparian and biodiversity requirements on the timber supply forecasts for the six Timber Supply Areas studied.

The Fraser River is the largest producer of chum salmon (Oncorhynchus keta) in British Columbia, with total annual returns averaging one million for 1980-93. This report reviews the life history of Fraser River chum salmon and describes the state of the river's chum stocks, including those in the Harrison River, Chilliwack/Vedder River, Stave River, and Inch Creek. Data on escapements are presented, showing trends for 1951-1991. The report then summarizes current management strategies for chum salmon, domestic and international allocations, stock monitoring activities, and annual catches in the major chum salmon fisheries (commercial, Aboriginal, and recreational). Finally, the report outlines efforts to enhance the chum fishery and assesses the capacity of the Fraser system to produce chum salmon and to rebuild the chum salmon population to higher levels.

The workshop curriculum provides a framework for the skills and awareness needed to begin creating an inclusive environment in the classroom and workplace. The workshop is based on a series of highly participatory, interactive exercises that examine how culture, both created and transferred, generates inclusion and exclusion. The workshop format consists mainly of small group exercises, is 30 hours in length, and is constructed so that the curriculum can be delivered in a variety of formats. Sections of the workshop are entitled creating the climate for discussion, defining the issues, forming a culture, examining stereotypes and privilege, reflecting the issues through case studies, and creating change.

This document presents the report of the task force established to provide direction for future governance of the Greater Toronto Area (GTA), a region accounting for 50% of the Ontario economy yet faced with the challenge of sustaining its prosperity and economic competitiveness. The first part of the report sets the context for practical solutions to the GTA's problems in the second part. It provides a geographic, demographic, and economic profile of the GTA today, reviews the economic sectors that drive GTA growth, and notes what those sectors need to compete and to grow. The second part addresses four major issues: reforming the property tax, planning and regulating the form of the city-region, strengthening the municipalities, and governing the GTA. Solutions are proposed for such problems as tax assessment, property tax inequities that affect business, urban sprawl, market distortions, regulatory obstacles, municipal inefficiency, and lack of regional coordination. The report concludes with discussion of the implications of the proposed solutions and suggestions for managing the transition to reform.

Sir Wilfred Grenfell was well known for his work as a pioneering missionary doctor who provided medical services and helped enhance social and economic conditions in northern Newfoundland and the Labrador coast. Grenfell's operations were headquartered in St Anthony on the Great Northern Peninsula from 1900 on. The town of St Anthony has already developed the Grenfell theme as a tourist attraction in a modest fashion. It is believed that there is significant potential for further development of the St Anthony tourist attractions, based on the Grenfell theme. This document presents a master plan for such development, beginning with an assessment of existing Grenfell resources and tourism infrastructure in place. The document then analyses the tourism market potential of the St Anthony area and recommends a Grenfell Centre concept that includes a new Grenfell interpretation centre and museum, waterfront developments, and relocation of the Grenfell Handicrafts operation. Finally, the document presents a financial feasibility analysis, evaluation of economic/social/cultural impacts and benefits, and an implementation and marketing plan.

The Health and wellbeing of children and youth in British Columbia : an action paper

British Columbia. Ministry of Health & Ministry Responsible for Seniors. Victoria : The Ministry, 1995. 24 p. : ill., Bibl. MICROLOG 96-03378 (1 fiche)

This document is an action plan which will form part of the development of an overall British Columbia Ministry of Health policy framework for child and youth health. It defines health in broad terms that include the concept of social health as well as conventional concepts of physical, mental, and emotional health. The document focuses on three key influences on the health of children and youth: the broad social and economic environment, personal and family connections, and a sense of control over decisions that affect their lives. Examples are included to illustrate the effects on health of socio-economic status, the benefits of creating supportive ties for children at risk, and role of empowerment. For each influence discussed, innovative programming initiatives are suggested along with proactive community and provincial strategies for improving child and youth health. BC HE PR SA SS

Heavy water : a distinctive and essential component of CANDU

By A.I. Miller and H.M. Van Alstyne. Chalk River, ON : Chalk River Laboratories, Chemical Engineering Branch, 1994. 11 p. : ill., Bibl. The exceptional properties of heavy water (deuterium oxide) as a neutron moderator provide one of the distinctive features of CANDU reactors. However, the low terrestrial abundance of deuterium makes the separation of heavy water a relatively costly process, costly enough to affect the economic attractiveness of heavy water reactors. This paper reviews isotope separation processes used to produce heavy water, beginning with a brief outline of the currently used processes based on chemical exchange. In efforts to reduce the costs of heavy water production, Atomic Energy of Canada is developing new processes based on hydrogen-water exchange: the CECE (combined electrolysis and catalytic exchange), CIRCE (combined industrially reformed hydrogen and catalytic exchange), and BHW (bithermal hydrogen-water) processes and their configurations are then reviewed. The vehicle routing problem with a heterogeneous fleet of vehicles (VRPHE) is a major optimisation problem relevant to such applications as routing of typical delivery vehicle fleets. This paper presents a heuristic column generation method for solving the VRPHE, based on solving a succession of homogeneous vehicle routing problems (VRPs). For each type of vehicle, the method solves the homogeneous VRP with an adaptive memory procedure that first generates a set of good solutions using the tabu search of Taillard (1993), then extracts single vehicle tours from this set of solutions and combines some of these tours to define a partial starting solution for another application of the tabu search. This process is repeated and tours are memorised as candidates for the final VRPHE solution. Computational results are included and new best-known solutions are reported for a set of classical problems. PR PS QU SC TR

High technology industries in British Columbia : the agenda for growth, a discussion paper

By Alex Klopfer. Victoria : Science Council of British Columbia, 1995. 96 p. : ill., Bibl.
MICROLOG 96-02870 (2 fiche)

The objective of this study is to assess the contribution of the high technology industry to the British Columbia economy and to make recommendations on how its growth can be maximized. The results presented are from a survey of a representative sample of the major high-tech companies in the province and from interviews with industry leaders exploring their views on the challenges facing high technology and their companies. The study includes key statistics on knowledge based industries in British Columbia and the status of those industries relative to those in the rest of Canada and neighboring US states. Issues discussed include the conduciveness of the provincial economic climate to high-tech company growth, the reasons why some high-tech companies grow faster than others, and the practices common to successful high-tech companies. The appendix includes a copy of the survey questionnaire and a survey summary.

The Alberta Health Provincial AIDS Program conducted surveys in 1990, 1992, and 1993 on HIV and AIDS in Alberta. This document reports on the 1993 survey, in which a representative sample of Alberta adults was interviewed via telephone. The survey had three objectives: to assess public opinion on a variety of public education issues including ways to encourage acceptance of persons living with HIV/AIDS, knowledge of modes of HIV infection, and opinions regarding sex education; to explore public opinion on issues relating to the use of condoms; and to ask two questions about HIV/AIDS testing to supplement more extensive data collected in the 1990 and 1992 surveys. This document presents and discusses the survey results and also includes a description of the survey methodology and respondent demographics. The appendix contains a copy of the survey questionnaire.

This document presents results of the fourth study of adult Albertans conducted for the provincial AIDS program. The first goal of the survey was to measure the degree of public knowledge about HIV/AIDS, the degree of public contact with persons with HIV/AIDS, the extent of recent and anticipated testing for HIV, perceptions of risk, and risk behaviors. The second goal was to compare responses with those from previous surveys to assess change in public experience, knowledge, and behavior regarding HIV/AIDS. The survey methodology involved telephone interviews with a randomly selected sample of Alberta adults, 18 years of age and older. A copy of the survey questionnaire is included.

The use of wood chip insulation was an innovation introduced in the final design phase of the Norman Wells pipeline to prevent or retard permafrost thawing on thaw-sensitive slopes. As early as 1986, observers noted evidence of continued localized microbiological heating within the wood chip layer on four slopes and by 1993, hot spots of one to over six meters diameter had been confirmed on 27 of the 56 insulated slopes. This report presents results of an instrumentation program implemented to study the thermal nature and effect of the hot spots on the underlying permafrost soils. The results are from observations made during 1992 and 1993 field sessions examining five slopes.

Human Resources Development Canada commissioned this study to assess the present and future business environment of the Canadian accommodation industry, the nature and structure of industry employment, and human resource practices and planning. The study also had the goal of identifying new technology, its possible impacts, and current human resources practices in the accommodation industry in other countries that may be applicable to Canada. This report begins with a review of the current state of the Canadian accommodation industry (mainly the hotel/motel sector) and its employment structure, including labor force characteristics, occupational breakdown, skill levels, and the potential for employment growth. It then discusses such human resource issues as turnover, staffing, education/training, career paths, cultural and gender issues, the role of organized labor, and technology impacts. Case study analyses are used to examine human resource challenges facing the industry and to profile specific human resource practices. The report concludes with recommendations regarding human resource practices and development.

This report examines the effect of unemployment insurance and other variables on the search intensity, reservation wage, re-employment wage, and probability of re-employment of displaced workers. The results are based on the Canadian Out of Employment Panel data set, which includes information on the job-search decisions and outcomes of a large, randomly selected, representative sample of people who separated from a job in Canada in 1993. The results shed new light on the behaviour of displaced workers, the relationship between unemployment duration and job-search intensity, the characteristics of those who searched harder for jobs, and the impact of past unemployment insurance claims on the job-search effort.

Methyl bromide, a widely used agricultural fumigant, is an important contributor to ozone depletion in the stratosphere. It is listed for control under the Montreal Protocol and is banned or limited in use in various jurisdictions. This report presents case studies of some of the research and commercial successes in finding alternative approaches to the use of methyl bromide in two sectors of Canadian agriculture: greenhouse operations and the grains, cereals, and milling sector. In each sector, a systems approach was required to replace or minimise the use of methyl bromide and other chemical treatments. These approaches include cleaning, heat treatments, cold treatments, aeration, use of carbon dioxide, irradiation disinfection, application of diatomaceous earth, use of biological pest control agents, and integrated pest management measures.

This guide is a reference document that provides a quick method for diagnosing moisture problems in cellars, and for identifying and choosing solutions to address those problems. The first part of the guide includes a general introduction to moisture-related problems, moisture as a phenomenon in buildings, and steps to be taken in carrying out a housesearch diagnosis. The second part provides systematic information on the symptoms of basement moisture problems, their possible sources and causes, possible solutions, and the ranking of the cost of those solutions. Appendices deal with more technical issues, including general information on related building materials, a glossary of technical terms, and a graphic checklist and road-map indicating symptoms, sources, causes, and solutions to demonstrate the scope of information provided.

The purpose of this study is to provide empirical evidence on exclusion from unemployment insurance coverage in Canada. Specifically, the study addresses the following major questions: What is the level and growth pattern of UI-excluded jobs under the current provisions? What are their characteristics? And what are their statistical determinants? We start by exploring some basic facts about UI-excluded employment in Section 2. In section 3, we empirically investigate the statistical determinants of UI-exclusion. Finally, in Section 4, we summarize the major findings and make some concluding remarks.

The Learning of literacy

By Gordon Wells. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1987. 12 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON06658
MICROLOG 96-03109 (1 fiche)

The author argues that the acquisition of literacy is based on the same principles as oral language acquisition and considers the kinds of instruction that are best suited to the needs of the literacy learner. The author makes a retrospective analysis of 128 children, starting from the vantage point of the end of the elementary years and trying to discover which of the variables measured at the earlier points in the children's development accounted best for differences in subsequent achievement. He discusses pre-school experiences which contribute to literacy, focusing on the importance of listening to stories, and examines models of literacy at school. Four levels of literacy are described, on which teachers may focus attention: performative, functional, instrumental, and epistemic. The concluding section covers literacy instruction in school and includes the following themes: reading and writing as meaningful activities; literacy through stories; parental involvement; integration of reading, writing, and speaking; and the role of the child as an active and creative partner.

Learning science with understanding : perspectives on learners and language

By Nicola E. Banks. London, ON : University of Western Ontario, Faculty of Graduate Studies, 1994. ix, 141 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07882 MICROLOG 96-02959 (2 fiche)

To ascertain what constitutes children's understanding of scientific concepts, this thesis examines three different perspectives of the learner: as tabula rasa, as discoverer, and as a constructor of knowledge. This examination results in a conceptualization of understanding used to interpret children's understanding of the concepts presented. In a grade 5/6 class, scientific concepts were presented through a multimedia unit about the work of oceanographers on a fictitious voyage to study whales. Information on children's reactions to presentations, and on their understandings of concepts, was collected through children's response journals, interviews, and teacher comments. The findings reveal the different reactions of children toward different methods of presenting concepts, and indicate the importance of addressing children's preconceptions and of developing scientific concepts and vocabulary in natural situations. Make me truthful, good, and mild : values in 19th-century Ontario schoolbooks

By Bernd Baldus and Meenaz Kassam. Toronto : University of Toronto, Dept. of Sociology, 1995. 53 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON08018
MICROLOG 96-02955 (1 fiche)

Examines values in the four primary school readers used in Upper Canada/Ontario, 1846-1910. It shows the importance of teaching values as part of the 19th century curriculum and the degree of correspondence between the known political apprehensions of the province's upper class and the readers' expressed values on social structure and distribution, work, and general personal morality. The paper notes that those apprehensions were often based on erroneous assessments of the actual characteristics of Ontario society, producing outcomes which were irrelevant to, or even contradictory to, the interests of those groups. Such discrepancies underline the complexity of the relationship between social structure and values and beliefs.

The labor market environment for career decision making has become more complex and the pace and nature of change has become more rapid and unpredictable, with a consequently increasing need for career development practitioners to learn about labor market information and to research and apply labor market concepts. This text is a response to that need. It is intended as an introduction to the different parts of the labor market and how they interact with each other. It examines four major trends in the Canadian labor market (innovations in technology and globalization of trade, shift to non-standard employment, industrial shifts, demographic changes) and how these trends shape the labor market of tomorrow. It then explains the National Occupational Classification and occupational forecasting, provides an overview of occupational mobility (with examples) and labor market skills for a new economy, reviews sources of labor market information for career decision making, and discusses education and training options in view of the need for continuous learning over the span of a career.

The focus of this thesis is the career of Mary Parker Follett (1868-1933), a leader in the development and evolution of managerial and administrative thought. Her experience as a teacher and community worker led her to argue that the group, the individual, and change were the crucial factors in the development of effective organisations. She believed that organisations should understand the dynamics of creative resolution of differences, and thereby be able to adapt and apply certain principles to areas of problem or disagreement. The first three chapters of the thesis discuss Follett's career, influences, and writings, and the fourth applies some of her theories to educational administration.

This insert describes ground survey procedures for measuring post-harvest soil disturbance (not intended for use following mechanical site preparation). Sections of the insert cover the determination of net forested area and application of disturbance results; the gridpoint-intercept method for measuring frequent harvesting disturbance from skidroads and random skidtrails; the traverse method for measuring infrequent types of disturbance such as landings, backspare trails, fireguards, and haul roads; calculation of survey results; and completion of the survey summary form. The appendix includes a list of equipment and information requirements.

This guide begins with detailed descriptions of the geological setting and metallogeny of the eastern extremity of the northern Abitibi belt in Quebec, focusing on the Chibougamau segment and the Southern Caopatina segment. The objective is to present an overall view of the volcanic stratigraphy, structures, and their various controls on ore formation, leading to an examination of the exploration significance of various types of deposit with respect to their regional setting. The guide concludes with description of a six-day excursion to the study area, examining the stratigraphic setting of the Chibougamau region, the geology of the Caopatina segment, porphyry type mineralization, epithermal and mesothermal type mineralization, and mineral deposits (copper, silver, gold) in the region. Details are included on the geology of a number of mines in the study area.

This guide provides site visit details for a field trip to the Abitibi greenstone belt of the Matagami, Cadillac, and Val-d'Or districts of Quebec. The purpose of the field trip is to give participants an understanding of the geological and structural settings for volcanogenic massive sulphide deposits in the belt and to illustrate the similarities and differences in various stratigraphic and structural settings among those deposits. The trip includes visits to the Bousquet, Louvicourt, Isle-Dieu, and 4CW deposits. For each deposit visited, the guide describes the regional and local geology, structure, sulphide facies and mineralization, lithostratigraphy, and (for some deposits) geochemistry. Specific topics examined include the effects of deformation and metamorphism on polymetallic assemblages, typical features of host rocks and massive sulphide orebodies, and hydrothermal alteration.

In the assessment of time-dependent mechanical integrity of the containers proposed for use in underground disposal of nuclear fuel waste, the role of creep deformation and the possibility of creep rupture of the container shell must be taken into account. This report describes an analytical approach that can be used to quantify the long-term creep properties of the container material and facilitate the engineering design. The overall objective of this approach is to formulate a constitutive creep equation that provides the required input for a finite-element computer model being developed to analyse the elastic-plastic behaviour of the container. Alternative forms of such equations are reviewed, and the recommended equation is based on current mechanistic understanding of creep deformation and rupture. The report describes the pertinent mechanisms and shows how their qualitative and quantitative characteristics can be captured. Based on this mechanistic underpinning, the selected equation derives from the theta projection concept. Examples are described where four characteristic theta parameters have been used to predict the long-term creep behaviour of a number of materials. The report presents an analytical scheme adopting the theta projection concept for interpolation of experimental creep data and long-term prediction of creep behaviour. It also proposes a criterion for determining the onset of material failure by creep rupture that could be used in the design of containers with extended structural integrity.

The report covers only changes and new activities introduced over the 5 years, rather than ongoing & unaltered programs. Policies still in the development stage were included only if they were already in the process of public discussion. Oil & gas, except for oil sands, are excluded. Policy initiatives are listed by province & for the federal government, with a separate listing for federal policy initiatives North of 60. Information is given on mineral & related task forces/studies, assistance initiatives, regulations affecting mines & mining, Crown corporations, taxation, & trade initiatives. An introduction for each province or territory discusses the industry & value of major minerals produced (eg. coal, gold, zinc, copper, lead, sand/gravel, uranium, potash, nickel, iron, asbestos).

Royalty agreements facilitating the transfer of property rights, and ultimately the development of mineral deposits, have long been part of the business of mining. These agreements can be remarkably complex. This guide combines real-world examples with straightforward discussion of different royalty provisions to introduce those involved with royalties between private parties (negotiators, investors, advisors, supervisors, purchasers) to the subject and to offer an opportunity to see the practical effects of some of the subtleties of mining royalties. Sections of the guide cover royalty agreements in general, definitions, types of royalties (including net smelter return, net profit, net proceeds, product tonnage, and combined royalties), determination and payment of royalties, miscellaneous royalty provisions such as assignment and right of first refusal, and provisions expected in every agreement (sometimes called boilerplate or lawyer's provisions). The appendices contain a glossary, a check list of royalty types and considerations, and a separately authored paper addressing delicate or potential problem areas of mining royalties between private parties and their negotiation.

ISBN 0-660-16214-8

Describes a model which assumes that the corrosion processes most likely to lead to failure of Grade-2 titanium nuclear waste containers are crevice corrosion, hydrogen-induced cracking, and general corrosion. The model also assumes that crevices will initiate rapidly on all containers and that the propagation of these crevices will continue indefinitely since conditions will remain sufficiently oxidising for repassivation to be avoided. The mathematical development of the model is detailed. A simple ramped distribution is used to describe the failures due to the presence of initial defects. For crevice corrosion, the propagation rates are assumed to be normally distributed and to be determined predominantly by temperature. Those containers not failing due to presence of manufacturing defects or crevice corrosion are assumed to fail by hydrogen induced cracking once the temperature falls below 30 degrees C. The experimental data on which the model is based is extensively reviewed, including descriptions of available data for describing and quantifying corrosion processes, results of studies on both Grades 2 and 12, and the effects of impurities, welding, gamma irradiation, and speciation of groundwater.

This paper analyzes some of the fundamental factors that determine forest age distribution in a disturbance-driven ecosystem. For the analysis, the paper reviews and develops theoretical models of a simple, homogeneous fire-disturbed landscape and uses them to examine forest age distribution under different conditions. The paper focuses on the effects of spatial scale and various spatial and temporal disturbance patterns. It specifically examines whether the forest age distributions are exponential and whether it is stable or variable over time; how the forest age distribution varies with landscape size and with temporal and spatial disturbance patterns; types of patterns representing those assumed in the classical exponential age distribution hypothesis, those representing spatial dependence due to fire growth, and those representing spatial and temporal dependence due to variable fire disturbances over time. The paper ends with a description of implementation of four disturbance patterns for the theoretical models in the FLAP-X program and presentation of computational results.

An understanding of the behaviour of moisture is important in assessing the performance of clay-based barriers proposed within the Canadian concept for underground disposal of nuclear fuel waste. This report compares in-situ moisture content values calculated from conductances computed using electrical impedance-computed tomography (EICT) data, with moisture values computed from psychrometer measurements. All measurements used in the analysis were taken in a 0.624-metre radius borehole packed with two meters of buffer (a 50/50 bentonite clay/sand material) and capped with a 1.25-metre concrete plug. The borehole was drilled into the rock floor on the 240 level of the Underground Research Laboratory in Lac du Bonnet, Manitoba. To make the comparison, two different moisture calibrations were applied to the EICT data. One set of moisture content values was derived from a least squares fit to a general form for the calibration curve using independently determined psychrometer moisture content values (the in-situ calibration). The second set was derived from a calibration curve calculated from laboratory measurements on samples of known moisture content.

The investigators measured pulsing parameters at wire feed speeds ranging from 100 to 500 inches per minute, at various synergic settings, and for welding procedures conducted in previous projects. The procedures evaluated are those suitable for the repair and fabrication of submarines.

The vastness of the Muskwa-Kechika area in north-eastern British Columbia, combined with its wealth of competing resource values suggest that there are numerous opportunities to integrate protection of environmental values with responsible resource development and wildlife management. This paper is intended as an information resource for those with interests in contributing to land use decisions in the area. It begins with an overview of some of the policy elements relevant to land use planning in the region, then provides summary information on the nature and value of the area's natural gas and mineral resources, the management of development activities for those resources, and possible options for land use designations that take into account the value of and management regime for subsurface resources. The appendix includes inter-lm management guidelines, excerpts from a land use designation zoning system, and a gas potential inventory assessment.

National production risk management policy for crops : discussion paper

Canada. Agriculture & Agri-Food Canada. Policy Branch. Insurance Division. Ottawa : Crop Insurance Review Steering Committee, 1995. 40 p.
MICROLOG 96-03290 (1 fiche)

This paper intends to stimulate discussion on policies and programs through which governments can help farmers manage production risks. The paper attempts to formulate the issues that should be considered in a review of production risk management programs (including crop insurance). The paper begins with a historical review of crop insurance, with emphasis on the policy objectives and principles that such a program was intended to fulfill. The following section assesses the extent to which those objectives were attained and principles were respected. The paper then formulates two orders of questions: whether previous and current objectives and principles are still relevant, and what program instruments best enable governments and producers to accomplish what they want. Five program options are briefly described and analysed: status quo, a two-tiered approach, an equity-building proposal, self-directed risk management, and a noninsured assistance program. The final section focuses on waterfowl crop damage compensation and prevention.

In the face of the need to make choices between programs that governments consider essential to administer themselves and programs that may be discontinued or transferred to other organizations, a new vision of government functioning has emerged, notably with greater emphasis on performance and results. This book analyzes the impact of an increasingly influential paradigm called new public management on the public services of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom. Major challenges common to these countries include powerful bureaucracies, restrictive organizational designs, and rigid rules and procedures blocking change. The book reviews various reform initiatives launched in response to those challenges in the areas of career public service, statecraft, administrative fragmentation and centralization, consolidation and devolution of authority, moving beyond bureaucracy, enhancing performance, and securing accountability. The book concludes with an agenda for public management.

To reduce the effects of chlorinated effluents from pulp mills that use chlorine in the pulp bleaching process, a number of non-chlorine bleaching or totally chlorine-free (TCF) technologies have been developed and come into commercial use. This report compiles the most current information available on TCF bleaching processes and their associated waste streams. It begins with an introduction on the environmental effects of typical pulp mill pollutants, emissions, and wastes, along with environmental legislation and regulations with regard to organochlorines. The TCF technologies reviewed include pre-bleaching technologies such as oxygen and ozone delignification, bleaching technologies such as biobleaching and the use of oxygen or hydrogen peroxide, and post-bleaching technologies. The report then reviews the status of TCF bleaching technology in the pulp industry as revealed from literature and surveys. Brief descriptions of the processes used at a number of mills in North America and Europe are included. The report ends with a review of the chemical and toxicological properties of TCF emissions, both aqueous and atmospheric.

Les changements qui se produisent actuellement sur le marché du logement favorisent l'introduction de nouveaux types de logements. Une des innovations proposées qui attire tout particulièrement l'attention est le logement densifiable. L'objectif de cette étude est d'explorer les possibilités de concevoir et de construire de nouveaux logements capables d'inclure un logement localisé autonome, alors qu'il est toujours occupé, et montrer que cela peut être réalisé avec un minimum de dérangement, à un prix abordable. Les points qui y sont abordés sont les suivants : le logement densifiable et l'évolution du marché du logement; conversion et plans de logements densifiables; avantages financiers des logements densifiables; et, exemples de plans de logements densifiables.

This thesis investigates novice client performance and client operations using the Gestalt two-chair technique. The investigation examined 18 counselling dyads (ten softening, eight non-softening) on performance task completion and sequentiality to investigate Greenberg's 1984 Refined Client Performance Model of Intrapyschic conflict resolution. The relationship between client performance and client operations, unique characteristics of novice clients, and client exit in the two-chair technique were also explored. Results indicate the degree of support for Gestalt theory with regard to the importance of maintaining clear boundaries in reaching resolution tasks and the importance of facilitating deeper experiencing.

In March 1993, Health and Welfare Canada and Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada announced a review of regulations and policies concerning nutrition labelling and initiated multisectoral discussions. The review was prompted by Canada's commitments under Article 708 of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement to work toward equivalent requirements for the labelling of foods and by the announced intent of the Government of Canada to ensure that its regulations and policies contribute to industry competitiveness and innovation. This document contains proposals to revise current Canadian compositional and labelling requirements for nutrient content claims and to harmonize these requirements where possible with the United States.

In the 1960s, severe degradation of the lower Great Lakes and several embayments of the upper lakes aroused public concern. An international review identified lake eutrophication as a major problem in those lakes, due to excessive inputs of nutrients; phosphorus was subsequently identified as the key nutrient controlling eutrophication. An international agreement signed in 1972 focused on reducing phosphorus inputs to the lakes. This paper discusses the progress in controlling phosphorus loads to the Great Lakes and the resulting responses of the lakes. Emphasis is on concentrations and long-term trends of phosphorus, nitrogen, and chlorophyll in the offshore waters and on the hypolimnetic oxygen depletion in Lake Erie. The current status of phosphorus loadings into the five lakes is reviewed, and system response is discussed in terms of soluble reactive phosphorus concentrations and algal growth, oxygen depletion, and nitrate-plus-nitrate levels. The paper concludes with a discussion of possible future Great Lakes ecosystem management strategies.

An emerging paradigm in solving the classical motion planning problem among static obstacles is to capture the connectivity of the configuration space using a finite, but possibly large, set of landmarks or nodes in it. This report extends this paradigm to the manipulation planning problem, where the goal is to plan the motion of a robot so that it can move a given object from an initial configuration to a final one while avoiding collisions with the static obstacles in the environment. The specific approach used adapts the Ariadne's clew algorithm, which has been shown effective for the classical motion planning problem. In this approach, landmarks are placed in lower dimensional sub-manifolds of the composite configuration space. These landmarks represent stable grasps that are reachable from the initial configuration by executing a local planner, again in a lower but different dimensional sub-manifold of the composite configuration space. The report describes initial experiments in which the developed approach was implemented with a simple two-degree-of-freedom planar arm among polygonal obstacles.

The rail corridor examined in this report extends for 466 miles from Eugene, Oregon to Vancouver, British Columbia. The report presents an overview of the whole corridor with the objectives of collecting and summarising the plans developed over the past three years into a single document that can serve as a basis for conducting the environmental impact reviews needed before designing and constructing further improvements to the corridor. The report also lays out the priorities, timing, and financial demands of a long-run strategy to improve passenger rail transportation in the corridor. The report adopts an incremental approach to rail corridor improvement which assumes that investment occurs in stages and is focused on improving existing facilities. The report begins with a discussion of the rationale for the improvements and a bibliography and overview of relevant literature. It then analyses train operations, costs, and revenues for the corridor, with reference to relevant experience in California. The proposed improvements to railroad infrastructure are detailed section by section, including alternative routings, and environmental conditions and impacts of the improvements are discussed for each section. The report concludes with a plan for institutional and community involvement in rail corridor plan development and a financial program for system development, operation, management, cost sharing, and funding.

The vehicle routing problem with time windows is a useful abstraction of many real-world problems in such areas as postal deliveries or school bus routing. In these problems, a time window is often associated with each customer location to constrain the time of service. This paper develops a parallel tabu search heuristic for solving this problem and describes its implementation on a network of workstations. It first introduces the tabu search approach used, then explains how parallelism is exploited to accelerate and improve the search. Finally, the paper illustrates the benefits of parallel implementation over a sequential implementation, using benchmark problems.

This publication considers how progress toward sustainability can be measured and assessed. The first part describes a framework for measuring and assessing such progress. This framework has four indicator domains, or areas of diagnosis, as cornerstones: ecosystem integrity, human/ecosystem interaction, and human well-being, with the fourth domain being a synthesis of the other three. The second part is the record of a colloquium on sustainable development reporting and contains three papers on ecosystem health reporting, the human/ecosystem interface, and approaches to reporting on human well-being. Each paper is followed by a synopsis of response and a formal critique. The third part illustrates how the framework for reporting (described in the first part and debated in the second) actually works when applied to an ecosystem. This part uses the Great Lakes basin as a case study. The final part identifies future challenges that need to be addressed.

Le Groupe d'étude sur les femmes purgeant une peine fédérale a mis en évidence la nécessité d'un modèle correctionnel différent pour répondre aux besoins des femmes autochtones incarcérées. L'établissement d'un pavillon de ressourcement répondra à ce besoin. Pour que les femmes guérissent ou se ressource, le pavillon de ressourcement et les activités qui s'y dérouleront doivent répondre aux besoins de celles à qui ils sont destinés - les femmes autochtones. Ce document porte précisément sur le plan opérationnel final et en examine les nombreuses facettes.

Perfectionnement professionnel : un énoncé de convictions et d'orientations

Cet énoncé examine le perfectionnement professionnel en tant que question regroupant 2 aspects distincts, bien que se chevauchant, de la vie des enseignantes et des enseignants: le membre en tant qu'individu autodirigé et le membre en tant qu'employé du système scolaire. La 1re partie met l'accent sur l'obligation professionnelle qu'ont les enseignantes et les enseignants, en tant qu'individus autodirigés, d'entreprendre des activités de perfectionnement professionnel. La 2e partie traite du perfectionnement professionnel des enseignantes et des enseignants, en tant qu'employés du système scolaire. L'accent est mis sur la formation en cours d'emploi, un élément capital du perfectionnement professionnel des enseignantes et des enseignants. Le programme d'études étant le principal outil au moyen duquel est dispensé l'enseignement dans le système scolaire, le document examine la formation en cours d'emploi aux fins de la mise en oeuvre des programmes d'études.

Ce système, TransCheck, est en mesure de déceler certaines des erreurs de traduction les plus courantes, comme les faux amis, les calques, les emprunts et certaines impropriétés. Ce document présente une étude de faisabilité à petite échelle, pour tester ce système.

The information in this publication can be used by producers as a guide on the factors to consider when looking at developing a pheasant enterprise. It begins with a history of pheasant breeds and an overview of the pheasant industry in Saskatchewan. It then provides information on marketing of pheasant, management of a pheasant enterprise (including hatchery operation, brooding, rearing, flight pens, feed/water requirements, sanitation, and handling of pheasants), resource requirements (capital facilities, stock, feed, and other operational needs), and production costs. Appendices include illustrative costs for a 400-pheasant operation, a housing and pen plan, and a directory of pheasant hatcheries, processors, and distributors.

Most statistical tests used in forestry research are based on the linear models of simple and multiple regression, and analyses of variance and covariance. This handbook explains various types of statistical models using simple graphs and simple arithmetic. Concepts covered in the handbook include the mean, degrees of freedom, simple regression, criteria for comparing models, one-way analyses of variance and covariance, heterogeneity of regression, analysis of variance tables for models fitted, and simple regression with multiple observations. The appendices include a summary of sums of squares of the residuals (SSR) notation, mathematical proofs, and example programs and output.

In 1995, Alberta Education conducted a telephone survey to collect information on the satisfaction levels of various stakeholders with the educational system. It is anticipated that similar types of surveys will be conducted by individual school jurisdictions and schools. Consequently, the ministry conducted a pilot project to compare the results of the provincial telephone survey with survey results at the school level and the results from telephone interviews with results from self-administered questionnaires, and to assess local training requirements that schools have for conducting surveys. The methodology involved separate questionnaire and telephone surveys of parents, students, and teachers at one school in each provincial jurisdiction. This report presents the results of that pilot project.

This document reviews adult literacy programs and activities in Prince Edward Island, including federal programs, provincial programs, federal-provincial cost sharing initiatives, and programs from major non-governmental organizations. The document includes results of a public consultation (including interviews, meetings, a focus group session, and questionnaire surveys) investigating the effectiveness of the adult literacy projects funded since 1988. The consultation also received public input about adult literacy issues. Three specific literacy projects were examined in some detail: a phonemic analysis training project, an academic upgrading program, and a Laubach tutoring (each one teach one) program. The document concludes with recommendations regarding the planning and delivery of quality adult literacy programs and services.

Three types of wood waste were spread on mineral soil and subsequently planted with black spruce. After one growing season, it became evident that either a fertilizer application of nitrogen-fixing vegetation was necessary for seedling survival and growth. The design was upgraded to a series of plot trials that included fertilizer applications and nitrogen-fixing vegetation. This report includes the growth rates of plants in different plots and provides potential direction for future research and development activities to facilitate reclamation and reforestation of degraded and unproductive sites.

This study reports on the use of airborne digital data collected from the Compact Airborne Spectrographic Imager (CASI) to map a dyed effluent plume from a Fraser River pulp and paper mill. During airborne data acquisition, rhodamine tracer dye was pumped into the effluent discharge at a continuous rate for 29 hours. An in-situ towed fluorometer measured dye concentrations throughout the injection period while simultaneously collecting salinity, temperature, and density measurements at various depths. The results indicate the feasibility of using CASI imagery to map dispersal of near-surface mill effluents, as well as the spatial resolution achieved

Il s'agit en particulier de définir la nature et les raisons des préférences changeantes des Canadiens, qui semblent aimer mieux déménager dans un logement neuf ou existant plutôt que de conserver le même et de le rénover. L'étude a aussi abordé les changements d'attitudes relativement à diverses options quant au genre de logement, au financement, à la dimension du logement, à l'utilisation de l'énergie et aux grandes caractéristiques des logements, y compris celles qui sont reliées à l'hyper-sensibilité à l'environnement. Un centre d'intérêt important de l'enquête est de savoir si les consommateurs visent un cran supérieur ou un cran demande future pour des maisons plus petites ou plus grandes.

The Implementation Committee believes that a professional college should be established for Ontario teachers. This document explains that an Ontario College of Teachers would offer teachers an opportunity to take collective responsibility for their own profession, professional education, ongoing professional needs, and for the accountability of the profession to the public. It states that the College would have a broad mandate to shape the future of professional education. Members would include qualified teachers in public and private schools, colleges, universities, and the private sector, as well as faculty of education staff and occasional or unemployed teachers. The document discusses the kinds of authority and powers the College must have, the responsibilities of College members, the need for the College to develop criteria for accrediting teacher education programs, and the issues of French-language teacher education, teaching Aboriginal students, and the status of religious education as a teachable subject.

Depuis 1991, on encourage le recours à la plantation de regarnissage pour protéger la régénération naturelle existante, pour éviter la perturbation des terrains et pour accroître la proportion de surface occupée (densité) à des niveaux acceptables à un coût réduit. Les niveaux de plantation de regarnissage sont passés de 10 pour 100 de l'effort de reboisement total en 1991 à environ 30 pour 100 en 1993. La formule de remboursement en vigueur avant 1993 était basée sur le taux utilisé pour "la plantation normale" lorsque les densités de plantation normale étaient inférieures à 2 000 arbres à l'hectare. Avec l'accent accru mis sur cette méthode de reboisement, on a commencé à se préoccuper de l'établissement d'un taux de remboursement plus précis et plus équitable. On a réalisé, au cours des saisons de plantation de 1992 et de 1993, des études des temps et mouvements de la productivité afin de répondre à ces préoccupations. Une analyse statistique a permis la mise au point d'une formule de remboursement fiable.

Since 1991, fill planting has been encouraged as a method to protect existing natural regeneration, avoid site disturbance, and increase stocking (density) to acceptable levels at a reduced cost. Fill planting levels have gone from 10 percent of the total reforestation effort in 1991 to about 30 percent in 1993. The reimbursement formula prior to 1993 was based on the rate used for "fill planting" when the full planting densities were less than 2000 trees per hectare. With the increased emphasis in this reforestation method, concerns were raised over a more accurate and equitable rate of reimbursement. During the planting seasons of 1992 and 1993 time and motion productivity studies were carried out in order to address these concerns. Through statistical analysis a reliable reimbursement formula was developed.

This document addresses the issue of professional development as one that encompasses two distinct, but nonetheless overlapping, aspects of a teachers' life: the professional as a self-directed individual and the professional as an employee within a school system. The first part of the statement focuses on the professional obligation of teachers, as self-directed individuals, to undertake activities for their professional development. The second part of the statement focuses on the professional development of teachers as employees within a school system. The emphasis is on in-service education which is a major component in the professional development of teachers. Since curriculum is the main vehicle for the delivery of education in a school system, a particular emphasis is on in-service education for curriculum implementation.

Project MING BAAK (to understand) is an exploratory study on the roots of Southeast Asian-based organized crime, the victimisation of individuals, and the effect of Southeast Asian-based crimes on the community as a whole. Data for the study come from interviews with a cross-section of the British Columbia Southeast Asian community, law enforcement agency reports, and published sources. This project report reviews the current Asian-based crime situation in the province, the degree of international influence on Asian gangs, the factors that affect the Asian-based crime problem, law enforcement activities aimed at that problem, Asian community perceptions of the effectiveness of the justice system, the effectiveness of Canada's immigration system in addressing Asian-based crime, and strategies for controlling and suppressing Asian-based crime. The appendices include the interview questionnaire.

Project specific guidelines for the preparation of an environmental impact statement for Saskfor MacMillan Limited partnership proposed twenty year forest management plan -- Draft

Regina : Saskatchewan Environment & Resource Management, 1995. 21 p.

MICROLOG 96-03289 (1 fiche)

Forest management companies in Saskatchewan must prepare and submit a 20-year forest management plan for their Forest Management Agreement area. Saskatchewan Environment and Resource Management has established that those plans will be subject to an environmental impact assessment. This document identifies the most important information which the ministry wants to be included in the assessment. It includes general guidelines on the intent of the environmental impact assessment and outlines of basic information requirements for subsections of the assessment, including those relating to the Forest Management Agreement, the company, the 20-year forest management plan, the existing environment (vegetation, topography, geology, soils, natural resources, water quality, climate, common insects and disease), present and proposed land use, alternatives considered in developing the forest management strategy, potential impacts (environmental, land-use, socio-economic), mitigation measures, and monitoring/research to track the identified impacts. Includes glossary.

The Government of Canada announced its Great Lakes Action Plan in 1989 to meet its obligations under the 1987 Protocol to the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. One component of the Action Plan is the Cleanup Fund, which provides funds to help develop and demonstrate technologies and remedial techniques to restore beneficial uses in areas of concern (AOCs) designated by the International Joint Commission. The Fund supports two kinds of projects: generic technology development and demonstration projects applicable to several or all AOCs, and specific remedial activities in a particular AOC. This report describes over 100 projects supported by the Cleanup Fund from 1990-91 through the current year. The report organizes the descriptions by AOC, and provides for each project the start date, project status, project contact, and summary of activities and results.

Public access to coastal beaches of New Brunswick

Fredericton : Porter Dillon, 1995. ii, 47 p. : Bibl. Commissioned by New Brunswick Dept. of Economic Development & Tourism.

MICROLOG 96-03013 (1 fiche)

A growth in travel in New Brunswick, and growth in beach attendance in particular, has magnified the demand for public access to the coastal areas of the province. This report presents an inventory of coastal New Brunswick beaches for which public access is provided. The context of the issue of public access to beaches is also discussed, with reference to historical government interest, current government management initiatives and legislation, and responses to public access in other jurisdictions. The report then assesses the factors that limit access, including upland development, signage and beach infrastructure, marketing activities, legislation, and environmental limitations. The report concludes with recommendations and strategic actions for ensuring future access to coastal beaches so that their tourism potential is maximized. The appendix contains an inventory of New Brunswick coastal beaches and a discussion of tourism development opportunities.

Public inquiry into allegations of irregularities associated with a public service competition : report

In August 1990, the Newfoundland Dept. of Social Services requested the provincial Public Service Commission to initiate a competition for twelve new positions of facility operations manager at three facilities for young offenders. Shortly after candidate interviews were completed, allegations surfaced publicly that a particular candidate had prior knowledge of the questions asked during the interview. The Commission conducted an investigation into those allegations in 1991, concluding that an executive assistant had provided the candidate with the questions. This report presents the findings of a commission of inquiry that reviewed all aspects surrounding the allegations of irregularities in the job competition previously investigated in 1991. It reviews the events leading up to the allegations and summarises the inquiry commission's investigation (which included public hearings). Specific matters investigated included whether any public employees knew of, or participated in, any effort to subvert the job selection process; whether the Public Service Commission's 1991 conclusions were supported by evidence; whether any provincial acts or regulations were violated; and whether any breach of duty occurred. The appendix includes a copy of the 1991 Commission report.

This study was undertaken in the McAdam map area of southwestern New Brunswick as part of the larger Southern Pokok Batholith Quaternary Geology and Till Geochemistry Project. The study objectives were to examine the dynamics of glacial advance and retreat in the McAdam area, including a study of ice flow directions; to study the specific dispersal patterns of the lithological and geochemical components of ablation and basal tills; and to examine the stratigraphy of the surficial units in the area. As part of the study, 331 samples of glacial sediments were collected on a two-kilometre grid over the map area. Analyses were performed to study the sample compositions and the results were assessed with areal dispersal plots and Spearman correlations. The till components were analysed to compare dispersal of clast and matrix components and to evaluate whether component dispersal adequately reflected bedrock sources.

Reasons for decision in the matter of Niagara Gas Transmission Limited : letter dated 21 July 1995 from Consumers' Gas requesting a decision on the jurisdictional question raised by the National Energy Board in its letter of 19 May 1994

In May 1994, the National Energy Board approved the application of Niagara Gas regarding the proposed construction of an interprovincial pipeline across the Ottawa River. The Board invited submissions on whether an upstream facility (the Ottawa East line) linking the proposed pipeline with federally regulated TransCanada PipeLines facilities is subject to federal jurisdiction. This document reviews the facts related to gas distribution facilities in the Ottawa area and related gas supply and purchase arrangements. It then summarizes the submissions received from interested parties regarding the jurisdictional issue discussed. The document concludes with the views of the Board on whether the Ottawa East line is a federal work or undertaking, or an integral part thereof. The document also includes two dissenting opinions from Board members.

Since then, society has undergone significant changes and the Plan has not been fundamentally rebuilt to meet the changing needs of those seeking assistance. This discussion paper outlines the types of clients receiving social assistance in Saskatchewan and discusses key issues to be addressed in reform: the demise of the Canada Assistance Plan, reductions in federal funding, changes in the economy and the labour market, child and family poverty, and the need for incentives to work. The paper ends with proposals for redesigning social assistance in the province, including provisions regarding child benefits, income supplements, a youth program, training allowances, child maintenance, and accountability. Reflections of women teachers' careers in their collective agreements

By Barbara Hoover. London, ON : University of Western Ontario, Faculty of Education, 1994. iv, 72 p. : Bibl. ONTERIS ON07888 MICROLOG 96-02954 (1 fiche)

The personal and professional lives of women teachers are markedly different from those of their male colleagues, yet those differences are not adequately taken into account in teachers' collective agreements. This thesis is based on historical findings in Canadian literature and on three reports commissioned by the Canadian Teachers' Federation. It focuses specifically on collective agreements from Edmonton, Winnipeg, London, Quebec, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, assessing them for the mitigation or escalation of inequities with respect to women teachers. From this sampling, the thesis notes any trends in women teachers' negotiated working conditions. It makes recommendations for improving both the collective agreements reviewed and the bargaining process itself to improve the quality of work life for women teachers. ED LA ON OR PR SS

Reform of the laws dealing with adult guardianship and personal health care decisions : final report

Halifax : Law Reform Commission of Nova Scotia, 1995. xiii, 104 p. MICROLOG 96-03005 (2 fiche)

Nova Scotia law dealing with the court appointment of adult guardians is contained in two acts inherited from 18th-century British law. The provincial Law Reform Commission believes those laws do not respond to current social needs and do not reflect current social values. Those laws also use archaic language, do not distinguish between guardianship of the person and of the estate, and do not contain a means for monitoring the powers given to guardians. Accordingly, the Commission proposes a new law called the Adult Guardianship Act. This report outlines the current laws on adult guardianship in Nova Scotia, reforms made in other jurisdictions, and the values that the Commission feels should be reflected in the new law. It also suggests how those values might be implemented in the new law and presents annotated draft versions of the proposed Adult Guardianship Act and a proposed Advance Health Care Directives Act which would allow capable individuals to make health care decisions in the event that they become no longer capable of doing so.

The first part of this study report introduces the tourism plan, the peninsula, and the strategic basis of the tourism plan, consisting of two components: creation of a destination image for the region and exploiting key development themes in combination with activity zone development. This is followed by detailing of the tourism development packages that will be used to implement the strategy. These packages have five themes: peninsular heritage, maritime activities, attractions of international significance (focusing on St Pierre et Miquelon), natural resources and recreation, and infrastructure. The first part ends with an implementation plan, including a marketing plan, organisational guidelines, and an economic analysis. The second part of the report provides background information: a regional profile of the peninsula, including population, economy, and infrastructure; an inventory and assessment of the tourism resource base (physical, recreational, heritage/cultural, attractions, accommodations, and hospitality infrastructure); and a tourism market analysis.

In 1987, a number of persons complained to the British Columbia Ombudsman about the government regulation of Newport Realty Inc. Investors who had lost money in mortgages sold by Newport blamed the provincial Superintendent of Brokers (the regulator of mortgage brokers until February 1989) for failure to protect the public, since they maintained that the Superintendent had been aware for some time that the company was in financial trouble and was operating illegally. This report summarises the Ombudsman's investigation into the role of government regulators who were charged with the responsibility of monitoring Newport's business activities. It reviews the history of the Newport Group of companies involved in the affair and the history of the Superintendent's dealings with Newport, including the four investigations conducted by that office. The report then addresses four reasons why Superintendent's powers were not exercised adequately, discusses the role of government as regulator, and makes recommendations aimed at improving public protection by making pertinent information available and at providing compensation for investors who lost money through administrative negligence.

Cette monographie a pour but d'étudier les effets du projet de loi C-113 (devenu loi le 1er avril 1993) sur la durée des périodes de chômage, le comportement de recherche d'emploi des personnes en chômage et la qualité des nouveaux emplois (mesuré par la rémunération et le nombre d'heures travaillées obtenus après une période de chômage). L'étude consiste essentiellement en une comparaison de deux groupes : les personnes qui étaient soumises à la loi en vigueur avant l'adoption du projet de loi C-113 et celles qui ont dû composer avec les dispositions de la nouvelle loi, moins généreuses.

Report and recommendations for the establishment and support of inclusive transportation services in Nova Scotia

Nova Scotia. Disabled Persons Commission. Halifax : The Commission, 1995. 52 p.
MICROLOG 96-02994 (1 fiche)

This report is the culmination of the work of the Accessible Transportation Committee of the Nova Scotia Disabled Persons Commission. The report reviews the jurisdictional aspects of accessible transportation services, the current level of accessible service in Nova Scotia (motorcoaches, urban transit, accessible taxis, ambulance services, private automobiles, school buses), and the impacts of changing demographics and governmental reform initiatives on provision of accessible transportation services. The report then identifies various issues as significant in the development of policy directions for accessible (inclusive) transportation and outlines the principles seen as essential foundations for a provincial policy. The report ends with recommendations for implementation of a viable, province-wide accessible transportation system. The appendix includes case studies of some unique accessible transportation options developed at the community level.

Canadian Forces Base Chilliwack is the only army base in British Columbia and is a significant part of the local economy. The base provides administrative and technical support services to all military elements on the provincial mainland and supports domestic operations such as emergency services. The Minister of National Defence announced that the base would be closed by 1999 and units stationed there would be transferred to Edmonton and other bases. This report presents the findings of a provincial task force that studied the impact of the base closure on the province's ability to meet the needs of a natural disaster such as a major earthquake. In conducting its review, the task force examined the legal and constitutional obligations of the federal government and the Canadian Forces to provide emergency assistance and the existing role of the base in meeting the province's emergency preparedness needs. BC Environment has developed this conceptual plan for research to support the establishment and ongoing scientific review of regulatory controls for effluents being discharged from pulp mills in British Columbia. This plan addresses chlorinated compounds, since these compounds are currently among the parameters used to regulate effluents in the province. The plan addresses five elements (pulp mill bleaching effluent research activities, resources, communications, co-ordination, and legal implications) and has been developed with two different approaches (the human health approach and environmental health approach) and options in mind. It identifies general research needs and specific projects on such topics as indicator compounds, effluent fractions, environmental quality criteria, modelling, and monitoring.

Le Fonds appuie 2 types de projets : l'élaboration d'une technologie générique et des projets de démonstration s'appliquant à plusieurs secteurs préoccupants ou à tous, et l'assainissement proprement dit dans un secteur préoccupant en particulier. Ce rapport décrit brièvement environ 150 projets réalisés dans les 5 années passées. Les descriptions sont classées par secteur préoccupant. Non seulement ils restaurent la qualité de l'eau et l'habitat aquatique, mais ils prouvent qu'il existe d'autres solutions d'assainissement peu coûteuses. Des projets génériques incluent des recherches sur sédiments contaminés, égouts unitaires et eaux pluviales, eaux usées municipales et

The report describes a revised conceptual hydrogeological model of the Area that takes into account the geometry of the region, boundary conditions, and hydraulic properties of the local geosphere. The report also presents results of a flow simulation using the MOTIF code, including a base-case simulation and a simulation using a model calibrated from results of field observations. The TRACK3D particle tracking code was used to calculate travel times, pathways, and exit locations of particles from various depths in the groundwater velocity field of the calibrated model.

This guidebook is provided to help managers, planners, and forestry field staff comply with the Forest Practices Code of British Columbia Act and to set and achieve the management objectives for riparian management areas (RMAs) specified in operational plans. It first provides guidelines on classifying streams, wetlands, and lakes, and establishing RMA boundaries for those riparian zones. Each RMA consists of a riparian management zone and, where required by legislation, a reserve zone where constraints to forest practices are applied. The guidebook also describes provisions for modifying the width of the management zone or reserve zone. The guidebook then provides general and specific guidelines for forest practices within the RMA, fisheries-sensitive zones, and marine-sensitive zones, as well as guidelines for management and use of range in riparian areas.

These features are: responsiveness to public policy concerns, interest in private equity markets geared to risk, interest in addressing capital supply barriers in certain sectors, organisation and direction by a legitimate labour body, mandates guiding investments according to socio-economic goals, capital resource mobilisation on a provincial basis, participation by a broad base of average working people, commitment to provide market returns, involvement of workers and unions in enterprise-based decisions, and facilitation of co-operation between labour and business. Initial infection with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) is followed by an asymptomatic period of variable duration characterised by a low or absent rate of virus replication, stable or slowly decreasing numbers of helper T cells, and qualitative defects in T cell function. The destruction of the immune system is not clinically apparent for many years and the likelihood and timing of the development of clinical acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) following seroconversion is not readily predictable for any particular individual. Due to the variable clinical expression of HIV infection, the use of non-clinical disease markers (surrogate markers) has become critically important to patient management. This paper outlines the ideal characteristics of such markers and then examines the current state of knowledge, clinical usefulness, and role of surrogate markers in the natural history and treatment of HIV infection. Sections of the paper cover the disease phases of HIV infection, serologic markers, antibodies, antigen markers, cell surface activation markers, and CD4+ T cells. The paper ends with discussion of benefits associated with the use of surrogate markers, criteria for defining satisfactory markers, and the selection of a preferred marker. Includes glossary.

Samples of students' responses from the grade 3 mathematics performance-based assessment tasks

Edmonton : Alberta Education, Student Evaluation, 1995. ii, 30 p. : ill. ISBN 0-7732-1772-X
MICROLOG 96-02838 (1 fiche)

The purpose of this document is to provide teachers, administrators, students, and parents with samples of students' performances that exemplify standards in relation to the 1994 Alberta Grade 3 Mathematics Performance-based Assessment tasks. The commentaries that accompany the samples highlight selected features of the students' responses and show how scoring criteria relate to students' work. The examples generally illustrate the quality of students' work at each of three levels: does not meet the acceptable standard, meets the acceptable standard, and meets the standard of excellence.

Au cours des dernières années, on s'est intéressé davantage à la santé des femmes et, de façon plus générale, aux fondements sociaux de la santé. Pourtant, malgré toutes les critiques formulées à l'égard du modèle médical depuis plus de deux décennies, il n'existe pas encore de méthode bien structurée pour comprendre la production sociale de la santé et de la maladie. L'objectif de ce document est de présenter un cadre qui permettra de comprendre les fondements sociaux de la santé des femmes. Pour ce faire, le document se penche sur les points suivants : les problèmes de santé des femmes; conceptualisation et mesure de l'état de santé des femmes; le rôle des facteurs sociaux dans la production de la maladie; contexte structurel et culturel des modes de vie malsains; analyse des données de l'enquête promotion de la santé; et, orientations futures.

This study examines the cultural differences between elementary and secondary schools. Three elementary and three secondary school teachers were interviewed, with an analysis made of their perceptions of the cultures of the schools in which they worked and of how school culture influenced their orientation toward the subjects they taught and the students they educated. The patterns of data drawn from the interviews were examined for relationships which demonstrate how cultural differences have influenced teachers' perceptions of the school environment. Overall, the study delineates factors which serve to define and influence school culture, and in turn influence those who work within its parameters.

In November 1994, a team of scientists from Natural Resources Canada, provincial resource departments, and universities, in co-operation with the Department of National Defence, made unusual seismic recordings of a large underwater source controlled explosion (10,000 pounds of HBX-1 explosive) along a long-range seismic refraction profile. The acoustic source was provided by naval forces as the Canadian Patrol Frigate Trial Series number 825, about 300 kilometres southeast of Halifax, intended to test the response of Canada's new class of patrol frigate to large shock levels. This report provides a complete account of the data recorded by 201 portable recording seismographs along a profile extending for about 600 kilometres across Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the Gaspé Peninsula. Clear seismic records were obtained to a shot-receiver offset distance of 900 kilometres. The shot was also recorded on stations of the Canadian National Seismographic Network between Halifax and Schefferville, providing calibration data to improve the capability of these stations to locate earthquakes.

Selected value-added exports from Alberta : results from a survey of manufacturers

By S. Stephen Janzen. Edmonton : University of Alberta, Faculty of Business, Centre for International Business Studies, 1995. 28 p.
MICROLOG 96-02906 (1 fiche)

This report examines the effect of the Canada-US Free Trade Agreement (FTA) and the current or potential impact of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) on Alberta business export strategies. The report selects for study nine product categories whose 1992 export values reflected significant gains when compared to those from 1988, the year immediately prior to the FTA. These categories were also chosen because they represent processed resource-based products or higher value added merchandise. To provide some detail, the report tabulates 1993 export highlights and market shares for each category. It also uses survey responses to profile a representative Alberta firm actively exporting and considers general perceptions of the trade agreements. The appendices include survey response highlights and the survey questionnaire, which was sent to a sample of exporting companies in each product category studied.

Signal characterization and pre-processing using Tuft's and Teager's algorithms

By David N. Swingler. Dartmouth, NS : National Defence, Research & Development Branch, Defence Research Establishment Atlantic, 1994. 49 p. : ill., Bibl. (DREA contractor report / Defence Research Establishment Atlantic ; DREA CR/95/401)
MICROLOG 96-02978 (1 fiche)

This report concerns two distinct signal processing algorithms linked by the notion that each has properties which could be useful in preprocessing or data reduction for applications involving copious quantities of real data. The first is Tuft's method for identifying the parameters of a transient having an exponential shape, based on a singular value decomposition (SVD) of a data matrix formed from the available data segment. This method is claimed to have improved behavior relative to simpler approaches, one of which is based on the SVD of a Toeplitz version of the same data matrix. The report presents computational results assessing whether the extra effort inherent in Tuft's method is worthwhile in terms of performance gain. The second algorithm involves use of Teager's energy operator in demodulating waveforms having simultaneously both amplitude and frequency modulation. Results are presented of an evaluation of the viability and computational efficiency of this approach for a single signal.

The fixed charge capacitated multicommodity network design problem is a well-known problem of both practical and theoretical significance. This paper focuses on the above problem with linear costs, which appears prominently when addressing issues in infrastructure construction or improvement, service network design, and design of telecommunication and power networks, among other applications. The paper presents an efficient procedure to determine tight upper bounds on the optimal solution of realistically sized problem instances. Feasible solutions are obtained by using a tabu search framework which explores the space of the continuous flow variables by combining pivot moves to column generation, while evaluating the actual mixed integer objective. Computational experiments on a large set of randomly generated test problems compare the performance of this procedure to other available methods and indicate the types of problems for which the procedure is particularly well suited.

This study begins by presenting a compilation of recent health and social services data on the epidemiology and, to some extent, the psychological and social aspects of smoking among the francophones of Quebec. The data include information on such matters as incidence and frequency of smoking by age group, sex, region, and other factors, age when smoking began, living habits, and satisfaction with one's health. The second part offers a qualitative analysis of smoking as experienced by francophones. A focus group technique was used to gather information on such issues as factors that encourage tobacco use, motives for giving up smoking, and stages in the career of a typical smoker. The final part discusses the implications of the qualitative analyses and conclusions, and presents a series of recommendations centered on a three-year plan to reduce smoking among francophones. Implementation of means to combat smoking is also proposed, including creation of a Smoking and Health Action Group.

Source parameters of the 1963 Mw 6.1 Baffin Island earthquake

The magnitude 6.1 earthquake of September 4, 1963 is the largest earthquake known to have occurred in the highly active seismic zone along the east coast of Baffin Island. Previous studies of this earthquake have not reached a consensus regarding its focal mechanism. This report makes use of all the waveform data used by previous authors as well as additional seismograms that were either unused (mainly southern Canadian data) or previously unavailable (data from the former Soviet Union). The report reviews the regional seismotectonics of the Baffin Island area, the data set and modelling techniques used in a new interpretation of the focal mechanism, a discussion of previously postulated focal mechanisms, and analysis and discussion of the source parameters of the earthquake.

Southeast industrial area structure plan and supporting information -- Draft

Calgary (Alta.). City & Community Planning Division. Calgary, AB : The Division, 1995. III, 75 p. : Maps

MICROLOG 96-03041 (2 fiche)

The Southeast Industrial Area is located in the southeast part of Calgary, east of existing residential communities, and covers about 5,200 hectares. This plan defines a land use concept for the Area, aimed at identifying appropriate locations for various types of industrial uses in a manner that avoids adverse impacts on adjacent residential communities. The plan also sets out transportation and utility infrastructure systems necessary for the orderly development of the Area. Suitable provisions are made for recreational activities in coordination with the adjacent residential communities. The first part of this document describes the planning policies for the Area with regard to industrial and commercial development, regional open space, transportation, utility services, development constraint areas, historical resources, environmental considerations, community services, and the development sequence. The second part provides background information to the plan recommendations.

Newfoundland's Southwest Coast region acts as a major transfer point for auto travel entering and exiting the province by ferry. The region's tourism industry exhibits a lack of accommodation and dining opportunities and of tourist attractions, and is not currently in the position to capture a significant share of this ferry travel market. This report specifically addresses this problem by providing the region with a plan to capitalise on its unique transportation linkage. It begins with a summary of existing tourist visitation to the region and of potential opportunities, challenges, and issues regarding Southwest Coast tourism development. A strategic approach to such development is proposed and tourism development opportunities are assessed in the general areas of physical development, programming, marketing, and organisation. The report then details four key high-interest opportunities

This report presents results of biogeochemical surveys conducted over a 150-square-kilometer area near Weedon Lake, central British Columbia, during late spring of 1988 and 1989. The investigators collected twigs of black spruce (Picea mariana) in an area covered by glacial material and overlying a fault zone which juxtaposes Triassic basalt with Mesozoic and Tertiary gneiss and granite. Ash from the twigs was analyzed for 35 elements by instrumental neutron activation. The results indicate whether certain elements found in spruce trees could reflect the chemical contrast between the two bedrock types on either side of the fault zone despite the presence of glacial overburden.

The population of beluga whales (Delphinapterus leucas) in the St Lawrence River is classified as endangered. This document presents a plan intended to bring the whale's population numbers and conditions to a state where natural events and human activities will not threaten its survival in the St Lawrence. The document first evaluates the current status of the St Lawrence belugas, including their past and current distribution, natural history, population dynamics, and threats and limiting factors such as habitat degradation, disturbance, and species competition. The document then describes strategies for recovery of the beluga population, including reduction in toxic contaminants in the St Lawrence ecosystem, prevention of ecological catastrophes, reduction in human-caused disturbance, and population monitoring. An implementation schedule is also proposed. The appendices include information on beluga diseases and parasites, contamination of the St Lawrence River and Estuary, and existing laws and protection measures relevant to the beluga and its habitat.

The Fraser Basin Management Board was established to bring together all Basin stakeholders to work to develop solutions to the challenges facing the Basin and to ensure its sustainability. The Board defines sustainability as managing the Basin in a way that considers the social, economic, and environmental implications of Basin activities in an attempt to meet today's needs without compromising the needs of future generations. This report is a first attempt at a collective examination of a number of key issues of public concern and to assess whether efforts to address those issues are leading toward Basin sustainability. The examination is arranged under sections covering population growth, aboriginal/non-aboriginal relations, the economy, forest resources, salmon fisheries, decision making, water resources, and planning processes. Each section contains background information, discussion of sustainability issues and responses, and highlights of areas of progress and areas where more work is needed.

This report addresses the state of the lakes, not the state of programs created to deal with the stresses impacting the system. It attempts to answer questions concerning swimming, eating fish caught, drinking water, how or if the water affects human, fish, bird and endangered species health, whether or not the Lakes are getting better, and what is being done about exotic (non-native) species. This is done by looking at the state of the Great Lakes ecosystem and the complex interactions with the many stressors on the system.

This paper is intended to provide a more coherent analytical tool for programming the Canadian International Development Agency's development assistance with regard to sustainable development issues. It begins by noting the challenge of finding a definition for sustainable development that is acceptable to both developed and developing countries, and reviews the main characteristics of the sustainable development concept: long-term perspective, respect for diversity and pluralism, use of an integrated approach, equity and justice, and reliance on participatory approaches. The five pillars of sustainable development (environmental, economic, political, social, and cultural) are then described. The paper ends with a discussion of the linkages between those five pillars, with an illustration of the linkages between economic and environmental sustainability.

ISBN 0-662-24106-1

Since the early 1980s, models based on economic fundamentals have been poor at explaining the movements in the exchange rate. In response to this problem, Frankel and Froot (1988) developed a model that uses two approaches to forecast the exchange rate: the fundamentalist approach, which bases the forecast on economic fundamentals, and the chartist approach, which bases the forecast on the past behaviour of the exchange rate. A feature of the chartist and fundamentalist (C&F) model is that the relative importance of these two approaches varies over time. Because this weighting is unobserved, the C&F model cannot be estimated or tested using standard techniques. To overcome these difficulties and to test the model, this paper uses Markov regime-switching techniques. The author defines the two groups' different methods of forecasting as regimes and rewrites the C&F model as a regime-switching model. The model is then used to test for C&F behaviour in the Canada-US daily exchange rate between 1983 and 1992, and evidence for the C&F model is presented along with suggestions for further research.

Le 1er volet de cette étude comporte un examen des données épidémiologiques récentes complètes en 1987 lors de l'Enquête Santé Québec. Les données sont disponibles depuis 1989 sur bandes magnétiques dans les établissements de recherche et des analyses spéciales ont été entreprises aux termes du présent mandat afin d'explorer la spécificité du tabagisme au Québec. Par la suite, les analyses comparant les caractéristiques des fumeurs et des non-fumeurs par groupe linguistique, ainsi que les analyses portant sur des mesures psychologiques ou des traits révélateurs des habitudes, ont inclus un échantillon plus restreint constitué des 16 653 sujets qui ont rempli le questionnaire auto-administré de l'Enquête Santé Québec et fourni des réponses complètes aux questions portant sur l'usage actuel ou antérieur du tabac.

The Steiner tree problem in graphs is defined as the problem of finding a minimum cost subtree of a graph G that includes the node set Z. This problem is encountered in many location, reliability, and network design applications, particularly in the telecommunications and computer science fields. This paper presents several versions of a tabu search algorithm for the Steiner tree problem in graphs, considering a basic tabu search heuristic with radical and/or continuous diversification. Computational results on a large set of randomly generated problems with up to 300 nodes are reported and compared with those obtained using four well-known existing heuristics. Additional computational experiments on the benchmark problems of the OR-Library, for which optimal solutions are known, confirm the quality of the solutions produced by the tabu search heuristic.

Taking the silence out of silent reading : an approach to teaching silent reading

MICROLOG 96-03118 (2 fiche)

Silent reading, one of two types of reading taught within the school system, is considered a predictor of reading independence. This study investigates silent reading strategies that fifteen grade 2 students used for decoding, comprehension, and comprehension monitoring. From the qualitative data collected in the study, the author compiles multiple silent reading strategies; she also observed the social aspects of reading behaviour. The following recurring themes are discussed: language conventions, decoding, comprehension, imaging, metacognitive strategies, background knowledge and experiences, social aspects, the research process, and classroom considerations. The appendix contains transcripts of student interviews.

This thesis presents a state of the art review and analysis focusing on the educational controversy surrounding the teaching of language mechanics, defined as language usage, manipulation of syntax, spelling, and punctuation. The thesis includes a historical review outlining the treatment of language mechanics teaching in high school since 1950, as well as an annotated bibliography of relevant articles appearing in popular English journals. This bibliographic review examines how teachers have reacted to the change in trends in teaching mechanics since 1950 and provides a critique of the reviewed articles, asking how they reflect what has been identified historically as the trend of a particular time period and how teachers are reacting to what the education ministry says should be happening during a given time period. The subsequent chapter focuses on what research has to say about teaching language mechanics, with summaries and critiques on such issues as instructional mode effectiveness, roles of teacher and peer instruction and feedback, and the effectiveness of various foci of instruction. The thesis concludes with a synthesis of findings and recommendations directed toward English teachers.

Describes experiments to determine diffusion coefficients for technetium in compacted clay-based material (soils) saturated with a synthetic groundwater solution whose principal ions were calcium, sodium, and chlorine. Tests were conducted in anoxic conditions established by conducting the experiments in a low-oxygen glove box and by mixing 0.5% by weight of powdered iron with the soils (Lake Agassiz clay and a 1:3 mix of dry mass of clay and crushed granite aggregate). Effective diffusion coefficients were also measured in oxic conditions in Avonlea bentonite, Lake Agassiz clay, and illite/smectite. Implications of the results for transport of radionuclides through backfill material and clay barriers used in underground disposal of nuclear fuel waste are discussed.

Saskatchewan Environment & Resource Management determined that the project would require approval under the Environmental Assessment Act, which includes preparation of an environmental impact statement (EIS). This document presents the ministry's technical review of the EIS, conducted to ensure that the statement has dealt adequately with the various issues identified in project-specific guidelines. The document describes the proposed project and provides comments on environmental considerations (including surface disturbance, water quality and drainage, air quality, noise impacts, and effects on wildlife and heritage resources), socio-economic and health considerations, and the mining company's proposals for implementing environmental monitoring programs, decommissioning the project, and reclamation of disturbed lands.

The Superior Province, Earth's largest exposed Archean craton, records a dramatic transformation at the close of Archean time from a primitive, primarily oceanic environment to a stable granulite-dominated continental crust. Prominent lithotectonic superprovinces appear to have been produced by accretionary processes like those active at modern margins. Significant advances in the understanding of Superior Province geology, particularly in its southern part, have been facilitated by integration of Lithoprobe bedrock mapping and high-resolution uranium-lead geochronology. This guide describes a field excursion across the Abitibi-Swayze-Kapuskasing-Wawa transect of the Superior Province that highlights many of these advances and provides an opportunity to address some of the unresolved problems. After an introduction on the regional geology of the Superior Province, the Abitibi and Wawa Subprovinces, the Wawa Gneiss Domain, and the Kapuskasing Structural Zone, the guide provides travel directions to the excursion stops, descriptions and interpretations of outcrops and other features observed, and supplementary information on regional structures and mineral deposits.

This guide examines the geology of part of the Southern Province of the Canadian Shield in the Lake Huron region, with a focus on the depositional and orogenic history of the Huronian Supergroup. This sequence is about 2.4 billion years old and contains major paleoplacer uranium deposits, notably those at Elliot Lake. The region is also known for the 1.85 billion year old Sudbury Structure, host to large nickel/copper sulphide deposits. The guide begins with a review of the regional geology, stratigraphy, lithology, structure, deformation, metamorphism, and igneous intrusions. It then interprets regional tectonic and metallogenic patterns and presents a field trip log for a four-day excursion that traverses the Sudbury Structure, the deformed and metamorphosed part of the Supergroup, and the Elliot Lake area.

Many North American jurisdictions have in place systems of scenic touring routes, usually accompanied by complementary signage systems. These routes are used to encourage visits to sites, areas, and communities of identified interest and can also be used to promote the natural, cultural, and historic importance of an area. Development of a touring route system in Newfoundland and Labrador is seen as providing similar types of benefits. This document is a master plan for such a system and begins with a review of themed route systems in other jurisdictions, and the lessons to be learned from these systems for application in Newfoundland and Labrador. This is followed by a brief overview of tourism activity in the province. The proposed concept for a touring route system first reviews a number of existing themed routes in the province, then presents an overall approach to designing a touring route system. Six major components of such a system are described and candidate touring routes are delineated and evaluated according to specified criteria such as scenic quality and historic appeal. The report concludes with presentation of a signage concept for the proposed routes and discussion of implementation issues, including cost estimates.

The purpose of this report to release geochemical data from the Geological Survey of Canada Terrain Sciences Division till sampling program in the Aylmer Lake area (Northwest Territories), to characterize the composition of glacial materials from the area, and to establish regional background concentrations of selected trace and minor elements for mineral exploration and environmental baseline studies. The report begins with background information on the area's bedrock and Quaternary geology, glacial history, and field sampling and analytical methods. The geochemical results are then discussed and presented in the form of tables, histograms, and proportional dot maps.

In southern Quebec, the Appalachian belt is composed of Cambrian to Lower Devonian rocks that record Taconian (Middle/Late Ordovician) and/or Acadian (Late Silurian/Middle Devonian) deformation and metamorphism. This field guide focuses mainly on features in Cambro-Ordovician rocks deposited on the Laurentian continental margin and in the adjacent oceanic basin, and on the stratigraphy and structure of post-Taconian sedimentary and volcanic rocks (Gaspé belt). The main tectonostratigraphic units described range from the Grenvillian basement to Silurian-Devonian cover rocks. After introductory sections on regional tectonostratigraphy, structure, metamorphism, and tectonic evolution, the guide presents a road log for a four-day field trip starting at Quebec City. Each section of the log gives travel directions and locations of outcrops to be observed, and describes for each stop the regional framework, stratigraphy, outcrop characteristics, and regional implications.

Knowledge of the transfer parameters for tritium is a key requirement to assess the public dose or to establish derived release limits appropriate for a heavy water reactor. This report revises the transfer parameters used to assess tritium doses via the ingestion pathway. The report first revises the procedure used in Canadian standard CSA-N288 is revised to clear up misunderstandings about the derivation of transfer parameters from air to forage and animal products. The report then rederives the transfer parameters, applying conditions of full equilibrium to dynamic equations that describe the transfer of tritiated water in food. The most important improvement is the introduction of organically bound tritium (OBT) production in plants or animal products. The report also introduces bulk transfer parameters which include OBT as well as tritiated water vapor (HTO). Recent experimental data are discussed and the appropriateness of the revised parameters for assessment purposes is demonstrated.

Transit for the Disabled Program

Saskatchewan. Municipal Finance. Regina : The Branch, 1995. I, 73 p. Cover title: Transit for the Disabled Program review.
MICROLOG 96-03295 (1 fiche)

This review provides a basis for discussions with Saskatchewan communities on ways to improve the Transit for Disabled (TFD) program. The review sought to address the questions of the current and future transportation needs of disabled persons, the success of TFD in meeting those needs, and how the TFD program could be improved. The review examined operating statistics gathered by municipal governments, a consultant report on current and future transportation needs of the disabled, comparative information from other jurisdictions, interviews with 26 participating municipalities, and discussions with other regulatory officials, vehicle and equipment manufacturers, and private operators. Issues for discussion examined in the review include program eligibility, capital funding, operating funding, and operational issues such as fares, operating procedures, driver training, vehicle restraint systems, and budgeting. The appendix includes a copy of the Municipal TFD Assistance Regulations, a summary of grants paid, 1994 TFD operating statistics, and information on TFD programs in individual communities.

Transportation and spatial cycles : evidence from maritime systems

This paper investigates maritime systems within a post-fordist interpretation using three approaches. The first, a regulation approach, underlines the constant contradiction between transport supply and demand. The second, a neo-Schumpeterian approach, examines innovation and its spatial diffusion. The third, a flexible specialisation approach, describes the adaptation capacity of transport networks with regard to changes. Central to these approaches are cycles which provide a conceptual background for an analysis of the world economy and of the role of transportation. The analysis is divided into long-, medium-, and short-term perspectives of maritime systems.

Tree farm licence 6 : rationale for allowable annual cut (AAC) determination effective December 1, 1995

By Larry Pedersen. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1995. 29 p.
MICROLOG 96-02868 (1 fiche)

Tree Farm Licence 6 (TFL6) consists of five supply blocks on land surrounding Quatsino Sound on northern Vancouver Island. The license is held by Western Forest Products Ltd. and the total land base is about 170,000 hectares, of which nearly 122,000 is harvestable. After a brief description of the history of the annual allowable cut (AAC) determination for TFL6, this report reviews the principles of AAC determination and presents an accounting of the factors and the rationale used in making that determination. These factors include the role of the base-case timber supply forecast, the land base contributing to the timber harvest, expected rate of forest growth, integrated resource management objectives, harvest flow, and normal losses. The appendix contains relevant excerpts from provincial forestry legislation.

Tritium gas of high specific activity is handled in tritium facilities associated with the removal, concentration, and storage of tritium. Since many components in such facilities are made of metal, there is concern that tritium-contaminated metal surfaces in those facilities may be potential sources of skin-contact exposure to tritium. This report presents results of experiments conducted to improve knowledge of the transfer of tritium to the body from contaminated metal surfaces. The investigators exposed hairless rats to skin contact with steel planchets whose surfaces had been previously exposed to tritium gas and measured the total tritium in exposed skin, unexposed skin, and carcass. Results presented include total removable tritium on the planchets, sorbed tritium in the planchets, tritium transferred to the rats, and tritium evolution from the body.

The UI system as an automatic stabilizer in Canada

This study examines the effectiveness and potential of Canada's unemployment insurance (UI) system to act as an automatic stabilizer of the Canadian macroeconomy over the business cycle. The FOCUS macroeconomic model was used to conduct a variety of simulations to investigate the stabilising properties of UI. The model simulated what might have been the economy's performance if the UI system had been made inoperative and was not allowed to respond to cyclical changes in the economy. The simulated performance is compared in the study to the actual performance of the economy to see whether, and by how much, the UI program has acted to reduce fluctuations in income and employment. Results presented include correlations between net spending of the UI system (benefits paid and premiums collected) and performance of the economy, the variation in the power of UI as stabiliser over time, the time lag involved in the stabilisation process, and a comparison of the stabilising property of the UI program with other fiscal stabilisers such as the federal personal income tax system.

This paper examines whether the unemployment insurance (UI) system induces significant distortionary impacts on job spell durations for seasonal and non-seasonal employment, a distinction made for policy and theory reasons. It is postulated that different groups of users may place different values on UI benefits if they provide temporary replacement income in an unemployment spell that is predicted perfectly in advance versus one that is unforeseen. Given that seasonal workers make their employment decisions within a one-year time frame, a comparison with non-seasonal UI claim patterns is useful to determine whether there are concentrations of job durations at the entrance requirement and qualification for maximum benefits, and whether the chances of job terminations increase for all weeks after the entrance requirement point is reached. The evaluation approach makes use of regional unemployment rate, in addition to other covariates.

This paper analyses the effective of the unemployment insurance regular benefits (UI) program in enhancing the productivity of job search. It focuses on the linkages between several UI parameters and the behavioural responses of the unemployed, and assesses the impact of these responses on job search outcomes. The intensity of the job search is the particular behavioural response that is emphasised, while the duration of unemployment spells and the wage obtained upon re-employment are the two job-search outcomes that are examined. The paper also assesses the impact of UI parameters on these outcomes. Three potential effects of UI are considered: the possibility that job-search subsidies may raise reservation wages (the lowest wages that unemployed workers are prepared to accept) and lower search intensity, thus acting as a disincentive; the possible increase in job search success change in UI policy with respect to job-search outcomes and draws some implications for the aggregate unemployment rate.

This study has three goals: to document the extent of temporary layoffs in the Canadian labour market, to examine the relationship between temporary layoffs and repeat use of the unemployment insurance (UI) program, and to examine the length of time that laid-off individuals spend in receipt of UI benefits according to their experience of being recalled by a former employer. Temporary layoffs are defined in the study as an ex-ante or expected basis as determined at the time of the layoff. A competing risks analysis of the duration of claims indicates the variables that influence the new job hazard function and the recall hazard function. The implications of the study findings for the conduct of labour market and UI policy are discussed, as well as the implications for advance notice of layoffs, experience rating in the form of a tax on long-term unemployment, and the design and targeting of a UI-sponsored job counselling program.

The British Columbia Ministry of Energy, Mines & Petroleum Resources chaired a Core Group whose mandate was to advise the provincial government on feasible options for reform of the economic regulation of natural gas gathering and processing (G&P) facilities within the province. The Core Group included representatives from gas utilities, producers, users, and the forest industry. This paper represents an analysis of gas industry regulatory issues by the Ministry and its consultants, with observations and input from Core Group participants. The first section describes the challenge of regulatory reform in terms of the objectives for the regulatory regime identified by members and the province's objectives for the natural gas industry. The second section outlines the development of the provincial petroleum industry, with emphasis on G&P. The final section describes the outlook for natural gas development in the province and discusses the economics of G&P, concluding with an assessment of the implications of the natural gas outlook for new processing capacity requirements. This report presents a conceptual framework for understanding the social bases of women's health. It begins with a discussion of ways of conceptualizing and measuring women's health status, examining different definitions of the main health problems of women and the implications of different types of measures of women's health-bearing needs. The next chapter focuses on the social bases of women's health and reviews the social and material circumstances of women's lives, showing how these are linked with women's health status. The report then examines health-related behaviors and the influences on women's lifestyles, showing the constraints women face and the ways in which their lives are shaped by broader forces. The background provided by the previous chapters is used in a multivariate analysis of 1990 Health Promotion Survey data. The report concludes with consideration of the implications of the analysis for future research and strategies for change.

Other Canadian Reference Sources

- Available from Micromedia -

Canadian Index

A comprehensive index providing access to nearly 100,000 citations each year from: nine major daily newspapers, over 200 Canadian trade and business periodicals, over 50 specialized Canadian trade magazines for which indexing is unavailable elsewhere, and more than 350 general periodicals.

KIOSK: CBCA

KIOSK: CBCA is a reference tool which combines a high quality indexing and abstracting database (CBCA) with direct access to the fulltext content of the articles indexed.

CBCA Fulltext

CBCA Fulltext provides fulltext access to Canadian periodicals and current affairs information, and incorporates the largest and most-comprehensive subject guide to periodical literature. CBCA Fulltext allows searching on Windows, Macintosh, DOS and UNIX platforms.

CBCA OnDisc

CBCA OnDisc is the Knight Ridder CD-ROM version of the Canadian Index, giving you access to ten years of indexing. It includes every citation in the Canadian Index, plus thousands of informative abstracts which do not appear in the print edition.

KIOSK: Maclean's

Published in cooperation with Maclean's magazine, KIOSK: Maclean's contains every article and news report published by Canada's Weekly Newsmagazine over an eight year period.

CNI Clips: Press Clippings on Microfiche

CNI Clips is a unique service which provides the full text of more than 40,000 Canadian Press news stories and feature articles each year, and is delivered in a practical and economical microfiche format.

Canadian Education Index

Canadian Education Index covers more than 200 Canadian education periodicals, as well as reports and monographs from the educational research community across Canada. In addition, the Index covers report literature from government agencies, educational faculties and teachers' associations, and large school boards.

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus

Canadian Education Index Thesaurus is a bilingual controlled vocabulary of over 5,000 terms, developed for the indexing and retrieval of French or English-language material in Canadian education, and is an invaluable research aid for users of the Canadian Education Index.
